Bennett backs Alberta stand

EDMONTON (CP) — Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed will not negotiate a new oil pricing agreement with consuming provinces at a first ministers' energy meeting in Ottawa next Monday and Tuesday.

Lougheed told reporters he is not optimistic there will be a quick agreement on a national energy package despite Prime Minister Clark's suggestions an agreement may be within several days.

The Alberta government welcomes the discussions because they might clarify the issues for Canadians in other provinces, he said outside the legislature.

The premier's insistence that only Ottawa and Alberta can negotiate an energy deal formed an essential part of his speech in Vancouver last week. He said then that either the federal and Alberta governments will negotiate an energy agreement bilaterally or Alberta will set the price of oil on its own once the current pricing agreement expires June 30, 1980.

In Victoria, Premier Bill Bennett reiterated B.C.'s basic agreement with Lougheed's position.

The resources belong to the provinces and they "should be able to get value for their products," he told a news conference.

He compared the current Alberta oil issue with B.C.'s rich lumber industry.

B.C. forest companies sell their products at world prices and this enables them to pay good wages to their employees, make healthy profits and modernize their equipment, he said.

It also enables the government to cream off sizeable revenues which help pay for social programs and health care.

If the federal government unilaterally said those lumber products were to be sold at half price, the social programs would suffer as would the forest industry workers and their employers, Bennett added.

The premier said their is "an economic shift" taking place in Canada because of the energy needs.

In a veiled reference to Ontario industries, he said people and businesses are going to have to move west, closer to the energy supplies.

"It is consistent with the growth of the country to have people and business move to where the energy and opportunities are.

"It is foolish to always look to the status quo.

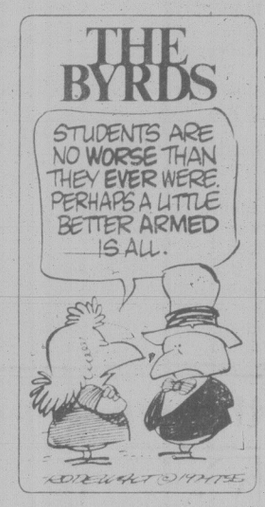
Lougheed answered Alberta Opposition Leader Bob Clark in the legislature Tuesday with one of his strongest statements yet on the state of energy talks.

"I believe I can assure the honorable members of the legislative assembly that there is no agreement with regard to a national energy package . . . that is even close . . . And although I can say negotiations are under way, I am not at all optimistic about it."

Lougheed later told an impromptu news conference he hopes his assessment of the state of talks is wrong and the province and the federal government can agree on an energy deal "over the course of the coming winter."

The federal negotiations have apparently bogged down over the distribution of revenue received from probable annual price increases of $4 a barrel for five years. Ottawa wants a bigger share of the revenue.

Meanwhile in Calgary today, The Albertan newspaper reported that an oil discovery that could ultimately prove as big as the massive West Pembina find has been made in the Clear Hills area about 480 kilometres northwest of Edmonton.



Khomeini won't meet Carter men

Times News Services

TEHRAN — The Ayatollah Khomeini announced today he would refuse to see President Carter's special emissary Ramsey Clark and forbade all Iranian government and revolutionary leaders from meeting with him.

Khomeini, in a special broadcast over the state radio, said talks on the fate of dozens of hostages held by Moslem students occupying the U.S. embassy could only be held if the United States handed over the shah and stopped its spying activities in Iran.

Iran's Islamic leader announced his refusal only hours after the White House disclosed it had dispatched Clark, a former U.S. Attorney General, as his personal emissary to negotiate the release of American hostages, the White House said today.

Clark — referred to in some dispatches as a friend of Khomeini's — had met previously with Khomeini when the ayatollah was in exile in France. He was accompanied on today's mission by William Miller, staff director of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence.

They were to try to settle a tense and embarrassing international problem for the United States that began Sunday when Iranian students stormed the U.S. embassy in Tehran and took dozens of Americans hostage, including 28 U.S. servicemen.

Western sources said today that Moslem militants had seized two more Americans from a hotel and delayed the departure of at least three others from the country.

However, the militants occupying the embassy and demanding the extradition of ousted Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi from the U.S. told supporters around the embassy to cease attacks on foreigners' homes. These attacks, they said in a communique, were "a plot to make us look savage."

In his special announcement broadcast tonight by the Iranian state radio, Khomeini said he felt it necessary to point out that the United States government, by allowing the shah to seek cancer treatment in a New York hospital, "has declared

Mussallem 'only kidding'

Socred whip George Mussallem now says he was only kidding when he said caucus chairman Jack Kempf should be fired if he can't decide what to do with caucus researcher Ellen McKay, implicated in the dirty tricks scandal.

Mussallem said Tuesday that Kempf is a competent caucus chairman who is doing a good job in a difficult situation and he doesn't feel Kempf should be fired.

Kempf had said he would look to the party caucus for advice on how to handle MacKay, who has refused to accept a 30-day leave without pay as a reprimand for telling party officials that writing letters to newspapers over false signatures is easier than one might think.

MacKay has taken the position that her statements were authorized and expected and that a reprimand is not in order.

In further developments in the dirty tricks affair, contradictions arose on the issue of whether MacKay and fellow researcher Jack Kelly were reprimanded by their boss after their taped statements to a party seminar of constituency presidents in Vancouver a year ago.

Glen Mitchell, now executive assistant to Education Minister Pat McGeer, said he reprimanded both of them the following week for statements they made advocating the use of phoney letters to newspapers.

"I simply advised them there had been a lot of bad feeling at the meeting about what had been said and told them they shouldn't do it again," Mitchell said.

Both Kelly and MacKay deny such a meeting took place.

MacKay said one of the reasons she has refused to accept a reprimand for her part in the affair is that the statements she made at the seminar were authorized and expected.

Meanwhile, MacKay finished her second day back on the job with no work to do.

Unity petition gets charge from Hydro

British Columbians will have a chance to cast their vote for Canadian unity when they pay their next B.C. Hydro bill.

Copies of a petition for Canadian unity, urging Quebec citizens to remain within Confederation and welcoming them as equal partners in Canada's future growth, will be included with Hydro bills throughout B.C. during the next three months.

Hydro spokesman John Sexton said today the initiative to have the petition included in the bills came from committee members who approached Robert Bonner, chairman of the corporation.

"I think what is at stake here is something fundamentally important to every Canadian," Sexton said.

"The chairman is very interested in what they (the petitioners) are trying to do."

Sexton said Hydro had to print up special copies of the petition which would fit in the billing envelopes and this will cost the corporation something.

He said he does not have the cost figure at this time.

The petition has been signed by half a million people for presentation to Quebecers prior to their referendum on sovereignty association.

Keith Cowan of Victoria, one of the authors of the Canada-wide petition and co-chairman of the campaign, said costs of the petition are being met mostly by public and private donations.

Cowan said that since Hydro agreed to include the petition in billings to its 900,000 customers, the national committee for unity now is approaching hydro electric companies in other provinces urging them to participate in a similar plan.

Teddy makes it official

BOSTON (UPI) — Sen. Edward Kennedy, charging President Carter with "stark" failures in leadership, today announced he will seek the 1980 Democratic presidential nomination.

With his wife, his mother and the rest of the Kennedy clan looking on, the 47-year-old Kennedy declared his candidacy in historic Faneuil Hall one year before the 1980 election.

"I take the course compelled by events and by my commitment to public life," he said. "Today, I formally announce that I am a candidate for president of the United States."

"The failures are stark," Kennedy said in a ringing attack on Carter's administration as he followed in the footsteps of his brothers John and Robert in seeking the presidency.

He became the first announced Democratic candidate. Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California will announce Thursday in Washington and Carter will follow on Dec. 4.

Under Carter, Kennedy charged, the nation has been "sinking into crisis." He pointed specifically to economic and energy problems.

Trudeau vows to try again

OTTAWA (UPC) — Opposition leader Pierre Trudeau says he will probably try again to bring down Joe Clark's minority Conservative government which survived a vote of nonconfidence by only two votes Tuesday night.

"We won't harass the government on every issue for harassment's sake but if there is an important issue we will take action," the Liberal party leader told reporters after the splinter Social Credit party saved the government with its five votes.

"We will probably introduce another non-confidence motion around budget time," Trudeau said.

New Democratic Leader Ed Broadbent warned after the vote the government had "better start producing the goods" because so far they have not carried out election promises to curb inflation, unemployment and rising prices.

But government House Leader Walter Baker issued his own warning, noting the Conservatives have survived their third test in less than a month. "People are getting tired of these games and it is time to get on with governing the country," he said.

All 26 New Democratic Party members joined the Liberals' 112-member caucus in the third challenge to Clark's leadership since Parliament opened Oct. 9. The final vote was 140 to 138 with the only missing member Conservative MP Paul Yewchuk, who was in his Alberta riding opening a school.

The motion, put forward by Trudeau, condemned Clark's handling of energy policy and the economy.

Clark successfully wooed the Socred caucus earlier in the day by guaranteeing them he would provide adequate oil supplies to eastern Canada and to independent dealers in the region.

Blunt no to Levesque

The premiers of the four western provinces said today they reject the concept of Quebec independence with economic association with the rest of Canada.

"Sovereignty-association is neither in the economic interest of Western Canada nor in the broader interest of Canadians as a whole," premiers Bill Bennett, Peter Lougheed, Allan Blakeney and Sterling Lyon said in a joint statement released simultaneously at Victoria, Edmonton, Regina and Winnipeg.

"The western premiers agreed that there is nothing contained in the white paper on sovereignty-association issued last week by the Quebec government that would in any way cause them to alter their views."

The western premiers said at the annual premiers' conference in La Malbaie, Que., in August, they questioned Premier Rene Levesque on the meaning of sovereignty-association.

"The western premiers were left with the distinct

Fetus a person, judge rules

By ROGER STONEBANKS

A County Court judge ruled today in Victoria a fetus in the process of birth is a person according to the law of criminal negligence.

The ruling by Judge Peter Millward is believed the first of its kind in Canada.

His judgment came in the case of a 52-year-old Sooke woman, Margaret Lillian Marsh, accused of criminal negligence causing death in a home childbirth.

The indictment said she caused the death of "a person," Nigel Ambery, on July 12, 1978.

The breech delivery occurred in a Shelbourne Street home. The parents had arranged for Marsh to attend.

The fetus showed no sign of life when born and cause of death was given as a cerebral hemorrhage.

Crown counsel Nicholas Lang argued in court last month that a fetus should be defined as a person at least from the onset of labor, but Judge Millward said it was not necessary for him to define precisely when an embryo becomes a person.

However, he said a fetus in the very process of being born is a person within the meaning of the Criminal Code's section on criminal negligence.

"The fact of death intervening between the time of birth and the moment injury was sustained does not change the quality of the wrongdoer's conduct," he said.

"A human fetus, at full term, immediately before the moment of birth is inherently indistinguishable from a newborn child, on a consideration of the entity itself."

The prosecution closed its case against Marsh Oct. 11 and Judge Millward reserved his decision on a motion by her lawyer, Peter Leask of Vancouver, that the Nigel Ambery named in the indictment was not a person according to law.

Leask also presented a motion that the prosecution did not include any evidence of a link between the cause of death and the alleged negligence of Marsh. This motion was also rejected.

The trial will continue with the defence case March 3 and 4, the earliest available county court dates.

'Monetarist' policy failure - study

TORONTO (CP) — The restrictive monetary policy adopted by the Bank of Canada in 1975 has seriously aggravated the country's economic problems, according to a study published Tuesday.

Arthur Donner, economic consultant with Research Securities of Canada, and Douglas Peters, chief economist with Toronto Dominion Bank, said the bank's high interest rate "monetarist" policy failed in its purpose to reduce inflation.

Instead, it led to restricted money supply, which increased unemployment, slowed business expansion and increased Canada's foreign debts by tens of billions of dollars, the report said.

The report, published by the privately-financed Canadian Institute for Economic Policy, recommended:

— An end to the central bank's policy of trying to direct the economy through long-term goals of money-supply growth instead of using interest rates and credit conditions to deal with such problems as unemployment and slow growth;

— A tax to penalize corporations which grant salary increases above government-defined ceilings;

— An effort to reach a relative balance in Canada's current account by 1985, and;

— A withholding tax on interest paid to non-residents.

The study, titled the Monetarist Counter-Revolution, said the central bank's 1975 switch to the so-called monetarist approach resulted in nearly five years of unsatisfactory economic performance.

The policy was adopted after some economists said Canada's recurring inflation stemmed from the expansionary money supply of the early 1970s. Proponents said restricting money supply would cure inflation.

This approach abandons the use of interest rates and credit conditions to influence short-run unemployment, inflation and economic-growth goals, Donner and Peters said. It also emphasizes fighting inflation rather than fighting unemployment.

Restricting the amount of dollars circulating in the economy backfired almost from the start, they said. Instead of reducing inflation, it caused economic stagnation in 1976 when money supply was insufficient to accommodate stronger economic growth.

At the same time, high interest rates forced the Canadian dollar as high as $1.05 (U.S.), they said.

AirCan profits jump 69 per cent

MONTREAL (CP) — Air Canada's net profits in the third quarter ended Sept. 30, 1979, jumped 69 per cent to $45 million from $26.7 million in the corresponding quarter last year, the company reported Tuesday.

Net profits for the first nine months of this year increased to $69.2 million from $50.6 million in 1978. Revenues were $1.23 billion against a restated revenue of $1.02 billion last year.

Figures for earnings per share were unavailable.

The government-owned carrier said in a statement that passenger volume rose 30 per cent in the third quarter this year over the same period last year, while the related yield per passenger mile rose seven per cent.

The airline's load factor during the period also rose by one percentage point to 72 per cent.

Khomeini won't talk with U.S.

its open hostility to Iran . . .

"Therefore, a meeting between myself and the special representatives is not possible."

In addition, he said:

"1. Members of the Islamic Revolutionary council must under no circumstances meet them.

"2. None of the responsible officials has the right to meet them.

"3. If the United States hands over to Iran the shah, "enemy No. 1 of our dear nation, and stops spying against our movement, the way will be open for discussion."

In a speech to students in Qom, Khomeini also vowed he would personally take charge if the U.S. attempted military action to rescue the hostages. He said America would "be in error" if it attempted military intervention, but if such an effort were initiated, "I shall move myself and you, dear nation, will move, too."

Meanwhile, oil rumors heated the crisis situation. There were reports — since strongly denied by Iran's oil Minister, Ali Akbar Moinfar — that U.S.-bound tankers had been prevented from loading Iranian crude at the country's main oil export terminal at Kharg Island on the Persian Gulf.

Investor concern that the turmoil in Iran might result in oil shortages for the United States sent stocks plunging in early trading today on the New York Stock Exchange.

In Washington, U.S. state department officials today said they have suggested that the remaining Americans in Iran quietly leave the country because of the seizure of the U.S. embassy, but that some intend to stay despite the seizure of the U.S. embassy.

Washington is keeping a close eye on a move by the Palestine Liberation organization to intercede with the Khomeini regime.

With the fall of Premier Mehdi Bazargan's government, the U.S. had only low-level officials left in Iran to deal with directly.

The announcement by the PLO that its delegation is going to Tehran "to secure the lives" of the Americans held prisoner clearly intrigued U.S. officials.

3 years for holdup

A 25 year-old man was sentenced today to three years in the penitentiary for robbing the Toronto Dominion Bank in Fairfield Plaza May 30.

County Court Judge Peter Millward said David John McCaskill has a history of continued criminality going back to 1965.

The judge said even accepting at face value that McCaskill is primarily interested in ridding himself of a heroin habit, he could not overlook his conduct.

Ship afire in channel

PORTLAND, England (AP) — Royal Navy helicopters and the warship Birmingham put firefighters aboard the West German merchant ship Levensau after it caught fire in the English Channel today, a navy spokesman said.

Two men among the Levensau's crew of 18 were reported injured aboard the burning 1,200-ton ship, 39 kilometres southwest of this community on England's south coast.

A lifeboat, a Royal Navy tanker and a merchant ship were reported standing by in case they were needed while a British tug was reported in the area to take the Levensau in tow.

The Levensau is registered in Hamburg and is carrying a cargo of live pigs. The rescue operation was started after the ship sent out a radio distress call.

NEB won't halt Trans Mountain oil tanker bid

VANCOUVER (CP) — The National Energy Board rejected a request Tuesday for an immediate dismissal or suspension of the Trans Mountain Pipe Line Co. application to allow shipping of Alaskan oil down Canada's West Coast.

Andrew Thompson, former chairman of the West Coast Oil Ports Inquiry, who opposes increased oil tanker traffic along the coast, said the federal regulatory agency does not have the jurisdiction to allow Trans Mountain to go ahead with its proposal.

The Trans Mountain proposal is one of several alternatives advanced to transport Alaskan oil to southern markets.

Under the plan, oil would be shipped by tanker to an oil port at Low Point west of Port Angeles. From there, it would be moved along pipelines to Edmonton and into existing lines to the United States midwest.

Thompson said the energy board did not have the authority to approve the Trans Mountain proposal because it cannot rule on safety of the marine environment in U.S. waters.

He said if Trans Mountain's bid was not dismissed, then it should be suspended until the company undertakes a complete study of the environmental and socio-economic impact of the proposal. Such a study would cost an estimated $5.3 million and take 13 to 14 months to complete.

THOMPSON
. . . opposes tankers

Thompson's motion will be heard as part of the final legal argument on the Trans Mountain application but by that time the whole of the company's application will have been heard.

In testimony Tuesday, three witnesses said moving Alaskan oil through the strait was risky.

"All shipping accidents are due to either mechanical-equipment failure or human error," said Captain George Veres, a master mariner.

The traffic in the strait and the elose proximity of eastbound ships would result in a built-in oil spill risk that could result in a major incident, said Veres.

C.D. McAllister, a fisheries scientist with the federal government, said the Trans Mountain proposal and a similar all-U.S. plan called the Northern Tier proposal should be rejected because of the danger they posed to fisheries.

The Union of B.C. Indian Chiefs and Washington state Indians objected to pipeline construction and shipment of oil along the coast.

"Our specific concerns is that during the construction phase, siltation of streams will occur at pipeline crossings," said the Northwest Indian Fisheries Commission of Olympia, Wash. The silting would be a hazard to fish spawning and rearing areas, they said.

"Major spills from increased tanker traffic in Puget Sound and along the coasts of Washington and B.C. will have significant adverse impacts on fisheries resources such as salmon, herring, groundfish and shellfish," the group said.

"Fishing gear could be fouled and result in economic loss to fishermen, and chronic low level spills will occur from the pipeline."

Report links 2,4-D, cancer

PENTICTON (CP) — There is strong evidence that the herbicide 2,4-D causes birth defects in animals and accumulating evidence it causes cancer, says a report prepared for the Seattle District of the U.S. Corps of Engineers.

A local environmental group, which released copies of the report Tuesday, is trying to get the British Columbia government to reassess use of the chemical to kill Eurasian milfoil.

Eurasian milfoil is a rapidly-spreading weed which has been clogging some lakes, affecting use of the waters for recreation.

The report condemns the use of 2,4-D to combat the weed in Seattle-area lakes which are used by the public for recreational and agricultural purposes.

The industrial hygenists who prepared the report say an earlier-environmental impact study on 2,4-D by the Corps which favored using the herbicide is "misleading, inaccurate or inadequately referenced."

The South Okanagan Environmental Coalition has written to B.C. Premier Bill Bennett and Environment Minister Rafe Mair demanding they reassess the use of 2,4-D in the Okanagan lakes system.

Salmon disaster aid sought

SEATTLE (AP) — Puget Sound gillnetters have asked Gov. Dixy Lee Ray to declare their industry a disaster area.

They say they need the declaration to qualify for the same sort of federal aid received by victims of hurricanes, floods and other disasters.

The salmon fishermen's disaster has been a lower-than-nomral salmon return available to non-Indian fishermen, said Phil Sutherland, president of the Puget Sound Gillnetters Association.

Sutherland made the request in a letter to Ray Monday. The governor was in Washington, D.C., and won't return to the state until late this week, said Ray's press secretary, Janet Smith.

Federal officials said the request would not be rejected out-of-hand if Ray forwards it to the Small Business Administration.

In his letter, Sutherland said Puget Sound gillnetters "are in dire financial straits from continued severe fishing restrictions placed on them by implementation of the Boldt decision and the low return of 1975 and 1976 brood cycle chum salmon."

The 1974 decision by U.S. District Judge George Boldt ordered that treaty Indians were entitled to half the salmon and steelhead harvested in much of Western Washington.

Tunnel traffic facing detour

DELTA (CP) — Southbound motorists who use the George Massey Tunnel on Highway 99 in the morning may soon have to find an alternative route.

If Delta council gets its way, it could mean up to a 50-kilometre detour for commuters trying to get from Vancouver to southern points in the morning crush.

Council's plan, in an effort to ease congestion, calls for conversion of Highway 99 to a four-lane, one-way northbound roadway in the morning rush hours.

Ald. Don Porter said northbound traffic often backs up as much as 10 kilometres entering the tunnel and the congestion has added nearly a half hour to the 45 minutes it used to take to get from Tsawwassen to downtown Vancouver in the morning.

Highways Minister Alex Fraser will be asked to approve the plan for a 90-day trial period.

Keep brown book closed: lawyer

VANCOUVER (CP) — Lawyer Robert Gardner said Tuesday he would not object to a public investigation into the activities of his client — convicted prostitute Wendy King — as long as the names in her little brown book remained secret.

But Gardner also said he was upset that the matter is becoming a political issue.

His comments followed a demand Monday from New Democrat MP Ian Waddell for an independent investigation into the connection between King and former B.C. Chief Justice John Farris, who resigned last year.

Waddell (Vancouver Kingsway) said the investigator should have access to King's book containing the names of 800 male customers and to police transcripts of 378 phone calls to her apartment.

The book and transcripts were sealed by a judge on Oct. 22 when King was fined $1,500 and ordered to do 200 hours of community work after pleading guilty to a charge of keeping a common bawdy house.

Gardner said while an independent investigation would not damage King's legal position, "she would feel hurt in that she had let her clients down — that she had embarrassed them."

Waddell told Parliament there had never been a proper public investigation of the case. He did not get the unanimous consent necessary to have his motion debated.

Farris resigned last year after police seized the prostitute's book listing clients' sexual preferences in code. When he resigned, an investigation by the federal judicial council was cancelled.

B.C. Judge Darrell Jones ordered the evidence in the case permanently sealed from public scrutiny because he said the book and police transcripts were not in the public interest and might embarrass some people.

Loosen the strings

The provincial ministry of health has many of the homemaker agencies throughout the province in a dreadfully awkward position with its uncompromising clutch on the public purse.

About 70 homemaker agencies operate throughout the province. They are non-profit organizations that for the most part provide domestic labor for the elderly, or people with some physical limitation.

The homemakers amount to an army of poorly-paid people (mostly women) who are providing an extremely valuable service, not only to individual clients but to society as a whole.

For a wage of about $4.50 an hour, these women travel to the homes of the aged and infirm and do housekeeping work, the grocery shopping or whatever else within reason that cannot be accomplished by the client. For people who are housebound, they are also a valuable psychological contact with the outside world.

This service also allows many to stay in their own homes. People with marginal physical ability count on the homemakers for household jobs which, left undone, could force them into long term care institutions.

For the elderly, there is great emotional satisfaction in being able to remain in their own homes and in a familiar community. For society, there is less need to provide the capital necessary to build more long term care facilities.

The provincial government certainly recognizes the worth of the homemakers. It has budgeted aproximately $8 million this year for their services.

The homemaker agencies are paid a fee for service, and naturally their major source of revenue is the provincial ministry of health. About 80 per cent of their clients are referred to them by the government. Remuneration amounts to about $7 for every hour that is spent in a client's home.

However, the slownees in receiving payment has left some agencies in the position of having to borrow from banks to tide them over until the government issues a cheque.

Many, including the Fairfield homemakers service have been asking for relief for nearly a year.

Under the present system 80 per cent of the previous month's billings is issued in advance and the remaining 20 per cent follows six to eight weeks after the billing period.

Theoretically that system should work as long as there are enough start up funds and clientele is stable. Unfortunately for Fairfield, and others, clientele is expanding. That means the advances and remainder of the payment for work done two months ago will not cover expenses for the month at hand.

The result is that new clients have been turned down and some persons responsible for these agencies have personally borrowed money from banks to cover wages and operating expenses. That is unfair to the people dedicated to keeping their agencies afloat. In addition, the government has to spend more money to cover the interest payments on the loans.

The ministry of health frowns on the agencies building up a modest cash surplus. It also frowns on paying 100 per cent of the previous month's billings in advance. And it apparently sees no way to speed the process of issuing the remaining 20 per cent of money owing.

For a government that has declared war on red tape and consistently urges personsal initiative, it surely can find a way to relieve this financial bottleneck and let the agencies get on with their worthwhile work.

They don't want us

It's enough to make you think those Lower Mainlanders just don't want Victorians to visit their city.

For years, the B.C. Ferries service has been such that it is difficult to attend any evening event in Vancouver and return to Victoria the same night. Even now that the last ferry leaves Tsawwassen at 10 p.m., a traveller still must leave downtown Vancouver before 9 p.m. One of the few options available to the Island visitor has been to stay overnight in Vancouver, then catch an early-morning ferry back home.

Now, however, Delta council wants to take that option away as well. The council is proposing to Highways Minister Alex Fraser a plan under which Highway 99 (the freeway that runs from the Oak Street bridge through the Massey Tunnel) would become one-way, inbound to Vancouver, during morning rush hours — perhaps until 10 a.m. each day.

Anyone wanting to travel outbound from Vancouver, such as Victorians trying to catch the ferry, would have to take an alternate route via New Westminster, the Patullo Bridge, and Surrey to reach the ferry terminal — an added distance of at least 50 kilometres.

The aim of the plan is to reduce morning rush-hour traffic jams and delays for commuters travelling in to Vancouver.

It may well do that, but it will also reduce the number of Victorians who can arrange to travel to the Mainland to spend an evening or stay overnight. Fraser should not approve any such plan unless special arrangements are made for ferry traffic.

RICHARD GWYN

Not the end of the story

"If the referendum carries, that could be seen as the end of the nation, which it won't be. If the referendum fails, that could be seen as the end of the issue, which it won't be."

Joe Clark, Oct. 8, 1979.

OTTAWA — At the Airport Hilton Hotel in Montreal, a noble hostellery reminiscent of the Savoy in London, with touches of the Ritz of Paris, one of the elevators was on the fritz.

Taped to the elevator door was the notice, "Out of Order." On it, someone, presumably a guest, had written: "When will this be fixed?" Lower down, someone else, presumably a hotel staffer, had scribbled, "After the referendum."

An evening spent lecturing newspaper publishers about "Whither Canada?", at the Montreal Airport Hilton, does not constitute, I realize, a truly exhaustive survey of the mood of Quebecers as they nerve themselves to decide their political future. The rules of investigative journalism require that, in addition, I ought to have interviewed at least two taxi drivers.

No panic

Still, since a public's mood is by definition intangible, intuition is as apt a way as any to read it. Post-Rene Levesque's White Paper on sovereignty-association, and pre-referendum, Quebec's mood seems to be laid-back. "Pas de panique" (no panic), as one Quebec journalist told me.

Since the ball, at this moment, is in their court, and since we, again at this moment, are only spectators, though keenly interested ones, our mood ought to be the same.

The referendum question itself will be a "soft" one, something along the lines of, "Do you want your government to negotiate, on the basis of equality, a sovereignty-association with Canada?" It's hard to fault Clark's argument that no poll on such a question will settle anything.

A "Oui" vote won't mean that most Quebecers really want to become sovereign, that is to separate. It will mean, mostly, that most of them don't want to vote "non," out of pride, out of self-esteem, and out of a fear they would rob themselves of their bargaining power.

Assume, though, the worst. Assume, that is, that Levesque, as he certainly will do if the result is favorable, re-interprets the vote to mean more than Quebecers really intended it to mean. We'll still be no closer to the final solution.

Suppose, in this contest, that the referendum is lost. Does anyone suppose that Quebecers thereafter would lose their voice, and their nerve? Does anyone suppose, specifically, that Liberal leader Claude Ryan, once premier, would be content to make his mark in the history books as having been the instrument for defeating Quebec's hero, Levesque, rather than as the creator of his own constitutional invention — special status, two nations, or whatever — which he could leave as a legacy to future generations of Quebecers?

Suppose instead that the referendum is won. Does anyone suppose that Confederation then would end?

Negotiations on sovereignty-association would take place all right, despite all the "No Truck or Trade" declarations being made now by Clark and by provincial premiers. Levesque's problem is that these negotiations return him to square one.

It isn't necessary here to come over heavy and to point out that in these negotiations, English-Canada would be bloody-minded and bitter. (There's an intriguing contradiction between Levesque's reliance upon the "democratic instincts" of English-Canada to execute these negotiations in good faith, but his refusal to accept that the same instincts apply, surely, within Confederation.)

It's necessary only to point out that Quebec's essential dilemma, which no political formula, whether of special status, or of decentralized federalism, or of sovereignty-association, can eliminate is that it is a minority, a small one within Canada and an insignificant one within North-America.

History has trapped Quebecers within a straitjacket. By efforts that have been truly heroic, they have survived, indeed have flourished. Only outright separation, though, which Levesque adamantly rejects, could remove the straitjacket. Within any conceivable economic association, as much as within Confederation, Quebecers would remain a minority — a more vulnerable minority indeed because the rest of the country then would regard Quebecers, not as co-citizens, but as foreigners, to be dealt with the same mixture of self-interest and of indifference as we now deal, however politely, with Mexicans, say.

Square one

Back, therefore, to square one.

Trust and respect, rather than even the most imaginative of political formulas, are the only foundations upon which a permanent relationship between a majority and a minority can be built.

For some time there have been clear signs — essentially, less chippiness on both sides of the border — that trust and respect are taking hold. We ought now to respect Quebecers' right to make up their own minds, and trust them enough to make up their minds sensibly.

We ought, as well, to remain laid-back, not so far back that we fall asleep, but far back enough to gain the perspective that the referendum result, whatever it is, will be no more than a paragraph, not even a chapter, in the story of a relationship between a minority and a majority that no one, ever, will be able to end with a "30."

Missed the mark

Typical of the views of many, but not necessarily all smokers, Thomas J. Swafford, in his attempt to rationalize smokers' objection to non-smokers' plea for no-smoking, comes off rather missing the mark.

Swafford uses the lame argument that he does not drink (alcoholic beverages) and is, therefore, quite entitled to ask a drinker to stop doing so (in his company) because it offends him. He continues that in fact "neither his nor anyone else's drinking offends me".

He attempts to draw a parallel between a non-smoker asking a smoker to not smoke and a recovered alcoholic requesting a "boozer" not to drink.

And that, I contend, is where his argument flounders.

As a lifelong non-smoker (not one of your johnny-come-lately refomers) I object not so much to the possible carcinogenic effects a smoker's smoke may have on me, but rather to the obnoxious odor cigarette, cigar and pipe smokers give off when succumbing to their addiction.

No, Swafford misses the non-smoker's point completely - as a non-smoker I simply wish not to have my clothes stinking of stale tobacoo smoke; not to be made to feel ill from ingesting 'smokers delight'. That is a right I feel I have, just as I feel smokers have every right to indulge themselves in their compulsion ... put please, not in my company, expecially when I am attempting to enjoy a meal.

As to the reference to booze; hell, I tip one or two from time to time. But I have never known my drinking to cause someone else to feel ill because of it; nor do I know of anyone who sat next to me to go away with their clothes reeking of liquor.

Check mate. — Bob Orrick, 2826 Prior Street.

Park policy

Development in Beacon Hill Park continues apace. Since 1974, the following 'improvements' have been added:

1. An additional restroom, near the tennis courts, necessitating reducing the size of the bushes which partially camouflaged the tennis courts from Cook St.

2. Paving the gravelled parking lot adjacent to the bowling club and tennis courts.

3. The grassy areas adjacent to the Cook Street tot playground are no longer available for a casual game of baseball or any kind of unstructured play. First a row of trees were planted along the Cook Street periphery, then picnic tables mounted on concrete platforms and a few more ornamental trees were put in.

4. Several raised flower beds near Cameron Bandshell provide additional distraction to the eye.

5. Putt-putt golf in the grassy area adjacent to these raised flower beds.

6. Another pond put in with considerable stonework.

7. The road to the look-out and the turn-about at top paved, with more stonework at the turn-about.

8. The replacement of a 'bare-bones' facility with a 'club-house' facility at the cricket pitch.

9. The widening of Haywood Ave., from Park Boulevard, to Bridge Way, curbing same, also curbing Bridge Way from Hayward to the restrooms.

An asphalt walk along these curbs further urbanizes our park.

In September, 1976, The Beacon Hill Park Association presented a brief to Victoria city council requesting a freeze on further development in the park pending a comprehensive plan. The effect of this brief and other representations that were made can be seen from the above list of 'improvements'.

It is cold comfort to know that the process of 'improvement' and alienation, started as soon as this superb area was set aside for a park. Even the roads that form its periphery were filched from the park proper.

Judge Matthew Begbie and Dr. John Sebastian Helmcken had to fight running battles to preserve the park. The irony is that the process continues irrespective of who the current parks board chairman may be. The request made by the Beacon Hill Park Association in 1976 was, and is, reasonable: "A moratorium on all developments while a comprehensive plan is developed."

Where do the candidates for Victoria Mayor and Victoria City Council stand on this issue?—Bernice Levitz Packford, 152 Cambridge Avenue.

Clean slate

If you want to become a member of parliament, in other words an MP, make sure you have a clean slate because these people who make all the news will hound you to death or make you quit. Make sure from the day you were born that you did not have any trouble because they will put the spotlight on you or make up stories that are not true, but once it gets into the paper nobody can undo it. — Joe Feller, 216-180 Croft.

Shelve extension

We understand that the ministry of highways has under study several locations in Vancouver which pose serious traffic problems. The minister has been quoted as saying that the department has insufficient funds to deal with these problems at present. We would like to suggest a solution.

The proposed westerly extension of McKenzie Avenue to Highway No. 1, in Victoria, is quoted as costing $8 million. This extension will destroy some perfectly good houses (some of them new), disrupt the lives of many families, and take a major artery past the McKenzie elementary school.

As frequent commuters, we find that it takes approximately 1½ minutes of easy driving to reach the highway from the present end of McKenzie at Glanford Avenue, via Tillicum Road. Extending McKenzie may reduce that time slightly.

Spending over eight million dollars to save some traffic perhaps 45 seconds travel-time does not make sense — especially when the money is urgently needed elsewhere.

As taxpayers interested that our money should be wisely spent, may we suggest that the McKenzie extension be shelved, some of the money earmarked for it used for clear directional signs to the highway, and the balance go to solve some of Vancouver's problems. — Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Cox, 2680 Macdonald Drive.

Band together

In Hamlet it is said that "there is something rotten in the state of Denmark". Under present conditions and particularly as regards current interest rates, I wonder if that cannot now be said about Canada. How much higher can interest rates go before something has to give?

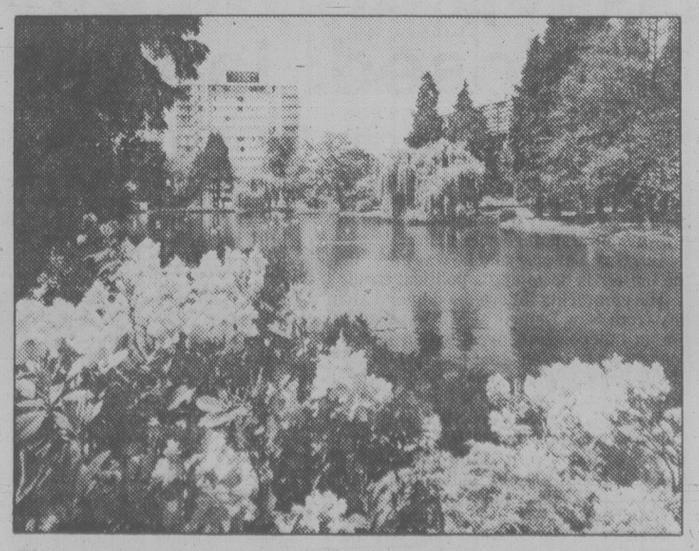
It may allow one a fine feeling to be able to invest $25,000 in Canada Savings Bonds and to realize that a year later the government will send along $2,750 and still owe the original amount. Two factors should temper one's elation. First, the investor is getting something for nothing and the rest of us, as taxpayers, are getting nothing for $2,750. Second, and perhaps still more important, since the government is running a deficit of more than $11 billion, the interest will actually be paid in newly printed bills, thus making certain that inflation will more than offset the payment made. These days everyone seems to be living at everyone else's expense and few appear to care about so much money coming straight off the printing presses with nothing to back it up.

My complaint about interest rates does not apply in the same way to equity investments. There one takes a chance with his funds and if the project is successful he may receive dividends and a good profit on resale. On the other hand he may lose his shirt but in neither case does the taxpayer foot the bill.

Please do not misunderstand me. I am not suggesting that anyone should refrain from buying Canada Savings Bonds. On the contrary the more purchased the better under prevailing circumstances. My hope is that someday a sounder and fairer economic system will prevail but it will not come about by individual action but only by the co-operation of the majority in the interests of all. In other words it is not for one to go against the system but to band together with others in the hope of having it changed. — F. L. P. Anderson, 409-2174 Cadboro Bay Road.

No vote inevitable

The great Quebec-Levesque referendum is heating up now to a white-hot fever pitch, instead of a smoldering ash, and sometime in the near future the people of Quebec are going to vote whether to leave Canada, or to stay in Canada. Until the referendum has been finalized a great deal of national and international debating and rationalizing will occur, and of course the Canadian dollar will flutter like a moth in a brisk spring breeze. People will, if they are interested in sound financial endeavors, leave and/or shun Quebec. There will be turmoil, consternation, confusion, gnashing of teeth, bleeding of ulcers, and in the end — I dare say approximately 87 to 91 per cent of Quebec voters on the great Quebec-Levesque referendum will conclude that dropping out of Canada and it's old age pensions, children allowances, Canada pensions, federal jobs, federal assistance, postal service, armed forces, currency, Alberta crude, and so on, will be as sensible as smoking a cigarette under water. — John Wickstrom, 3264 Shelley Street.



Piecemeal development is hurting Beacon Hill Park, says reader.

Another U.K. hero shot down

By NORMAN WEBSTER
The Globe and Mail

LONDON — It has been a bad year for British heroes. Churchill's streak of cruelty has been revealed by an associate, Lord Baden-Powell accused of unboy-scout-like treatment of blacks during the Boer War — and now that greatest of all heroic sagas, the stirring story of Scott of the Antarctic, has been exposed as a myth in a devastating new book.

Generations of British school-boys have been raised on the exploits of Capt. Robert Scott, the gallant leader who reached the South Pole in 1912 only to find the Norwegian Ronald Amundsen had got there first. On the way back, he and his party perished just 11 miles from a depot of stores that might have saved them.

One of the party, Capt. Lawrence Oates, sacrificed himself for his companions by walking out into a blizzard with the memorable words: "I am just going outside and may be some time."

"We are showing that Englishmen can still die with a bold spirit, fighting it out to the end," Scott himself wrote in a letter found with his body.

When the news reached England, one journalist declared, "with the sole exception of the death of Nelson in the hour of victory, there has been nothing so dramatic". A nation wept.

As recently as last Sunday, the BBC ran a movie portraying the heroic figure whose virtue and courage have, according to history, made the Scott expedition not a tragedy but a triumph of man's spirit against all the odds.

History, says Roland Huntford, is bunk, and he seems to have the evidence to prove it. In a book entitled Scott and Amundsen, just published here, he systematically sets out to destroy belief in Scott-as-hero.

It is true, of course, that the party did perish on its return journey from the Pole ("Great God! this is an awful place," Capt. Scott wrote). But that's about all you can believe, says the author, a man whose 12 years as Observer correspondent in Scandinavia gave him access to sources never tapped before and an understanding of Arctic conditions which Scott, apparently, never acquired.

Far from a great man defeated by bad luck and bad weather, Huntford maintains, Capt. Scott was a moral coward and a disastrous leader who brought about the death of his men.

If he had made it back alive, "he would probably have been discredited and died half-forgetten." In the end, he welcomed martyrdom and ensured his fame with a selective version of events, beautifully penned in the diary he kept till the end.

"He personified the glorious failure which by now had become the (British) ideal," Huntford writes pitilessly. "He was a suitable hero for a nation in decline."

In contrast, it seems, Amundsen was a brilliant explorer and a genuinely great man. Traditionally seen in Britain as that horrid thing, a professional, one, moreover, who refused to die heroically on the trail, Amundsen has never really been given his due until now.

The attack on Scott has had the same impact here as if an American were to write that George Washington really was a liar and a cheat who probably smoked dope behind the cherry tree. It has brought a thunderous denunciation from the explorer's son, Sir Peter Scott, who was just two years old when his father died.

Sir Peter, who gave the author access to the Scott family papers, has accused him of character assassination and issued a writ alleging libel, breach of contract and infringement of copyright.

Gordon Robin, director of the Scott Polar Research Institute, says the book ignores the scientific contribution of the Scott expedition. He says it does not fairly put the case for both sides.

Certainly the book reads like a case for the prosecution. The author is relentlessly, implacably hostile to Capt. Scott, judging him to be reckless, indecisive, inept, a martinet, a bungler, a promotion-chaser and, to belittle him further, a cuckold.

Huntford says that even as Capt. Scott was plodding across the southern wastes on his way to the Pole, his wife was in bed with Fridtjof Nansen, another Norwegian explorer and friend of Amundsen. This charge has been attacked by another family member, Lady Scott's son by her second marriage, but the author refuses to withdraw.

His sneering tone toward both the Scotts is perhaps best expressed in his account of the conception of Sir-Peter-to-be:

"Meanwhile, there was the business of a baby which, after all, was Kathleen's (Lady Scott's) main reason for marrying. She summoned Scott to London at the proper time in her menstrual cycle, but otherwise seemed to bear his absence very well, so that his function was made almost comically clear."

Mean-minded as his comments may be, Huntford has dug up damning evidence to support his indictment of the hero. Capt. Scott's preparations for his perilous journey bordered on the farcical.

To buy the Manchuria ponies he depended on as beasts of burden, he sent someone who knew nothing about horseflesh. The ponies eventually were bought with the aid of a Russian jockey from Vladivostock and turned out to be scarcely fit for the glue factory.

At one fateful point, Scott dumped supplies and turned back rather than press on and see his ponies suffer more. Thus was established One Ton Depot, the one the polar party almost reached before it perished.

Amundsen dashed to the Pole with Greenland dog teams, killing and eating dogs along the way. Scott relied mainly on man-hauling, a brutally exhausting task which wore down the resistance of his crew far more than the conditions.

But it was more than romantic nonsense which did the British in. Where Amundsen paid careful attention to diet, Scott's party suffered from vitamin deficiencies and the beginnings of scurvy.

Scott marked supply depots with a single flag and often had to blunder about for precious hours and day to find them. Amundsen had an elaborate system of markers that couldn't be missed.

Amundsen's clothes and skis and methods were better, based on experience in the Canadian Arctic with Eskimos. Scott seemed to think British muddling-through would do the trick.

Author Huntford makes some other startling claims. He says the records show ironically that, after all their effort, Scott and his men miscalculated and never actually stood closer than half a mile from the Pole.

He says Capt. Oates never made his stirring speech about just going outside. Another man in the tent wrote to Oates' mother without mentioning it, and Huntford accepts his testimony before Scott's.

"Scott was by now writing for publication some day — Scott was preparing his alibi — Oates simply had to have a story-book ending."

More questionably, Huntford implies that Scott in effect drove the weakened Oates, who had become a drag on the party, out into the blizzard. Oates, he writes, "sat there in the tent, Scott staring at him, with the unspoken expectation of the supreme sacrifice."

How can the author know this? He has replied to critics that "one has to interpret now and again".

He does it again in his description of the final days of the three surviving members of the polar party. He says Scott, frozen and starving, his foot fit only for amputation, kept the other two from making a desperate bid to reach One Ton Depot through the blizzard.

"He had been beaten to the Pole. He had bungled the whole enterprise. He had departed in triumph, and now he would have to return home and face his public in defeat," Huntford says.

"Scott would have to answer for the men he has lost . . .

"That was something Scott could not face. It would be better to seek immolation in the tent. That way he could snatch a kind of victory out of defeat. Wilson and Bowers were persuaded to lie down with him and wait for the end"

It's a savage interpretation of Scott's final thoughts, and again, how can Huntford know? Could he not grant him, at the end, some nobility and courage?

Over-all, though, there seems no reason to doubt the verdict of the book-reviewer here who wrote the other day, "The plaster saint has been smashed forever."

No place for mother in 'gender-neutral'

By ZAN THOMPSON
The Los Angeles Times

I have nothing specific against the Department of Health, Education and Welfare; only my omnibus antipathy to most things connected with government.

HEW, I think, is the largest collection of employees under one federal jurisdiction other than the armed forces. That's a lot of people to burrow around Washington trying to think up things to do. Actually, I have known a good number of people at HEW with perfectly superb sense. It's just that they are so outnumbered by the interchangeable minions, it's difficult for them to make any kind of showing.

HEW has joined the Labor Department in launching an all-out campaign to make its literature gender-neutral. Isn't that a dandy phrase? Do you know anyone who really wants to be gender-neutral? The sex-biased words must go, say the loony lexicographers of the great, gray secretariat.

Some of the words to be eliminated immediately are he, she, coed, father, mother, sir, batboy, manning chart. How did they decide that mother is an objectionable word? What about all the songs? What'll happen to Mother Machree? What about all the middle-aged men who wear the word "mother," in trailing script in a wreath of roses on their forearms, the result of a homesick 20 minutes in a tattoo parlor when they were in the service? First, HEW will have to gather all those men in and remove the tattoos.

Milkman will become, says HEW, "Dairy products deliverer." In the first place, I haven't seen a milkman in years. Secondly, if you really wanted to catch a milkman and ask him to leave some cottage cheese, he'd be around the corner by the time you told a kid to run out and stop the dairy products deliverer.

The whole idea of gender-neutral words is so nasty and niggling that it is an insult to the people whose job titles are supposed to be upgraded. They can't be so quavery about their abilities that they think being called a shapeless, faceless word will put them in line for the Most Improved Employee Award.

Surely, HEW's wordwarts can't possibly believe that changing the gender of a word will change the gender of the person performing the task? People with ability, aptitude, ambition will move ahead whether they are called something neuter-gender or not, although it does seem denigrative. Not to know if one is a man or a woman would send one running for instant therapy. It surely won't strike a spark of old team spirit to be told that all you neuter-genders can make yours the best little department in HEW.

Is it fear that prompts the elimination of male and female words? Have we so far passed 1984 that the eunuchoid is the optimum being? How sad. But mostly, how silly.

No matter what people are called, they are men or women and the prissy care being taken to gainsay that fact is ridiculous.

HEW has officially "dissanctioned" sex-biased terms. Ain't that a rouser of a word? Another annoying habit of the bureaucratic list-maker is his cavalier technique of throwing a suffix or prefix on a word and using it as if it were a word in good standing. Who says so? The goof who cobbled it up?

I received a small cheque for a small service from a public entity the other day. On the back of it was stamped: "This warrant is void without colored background on face." Whose face? Mine? Why didn't they just print the cheque properly in the first place and omit that mouthy little phrase? It sounds as if the casher of the cheque would have to be a member of a minstrel show.

A recent item in the Los Angeles Times said, "Joan Mondale announced a Labor Department grant...to help create jobs for performers and craftsmen."

Well, bygod, that craftsmen has to go. How about Craftsfolk. Sounds homey for people who make dolls out of corn husks and carve birch bark whistles. In case it had slipped your gaze, honey, I'm a woman, W-o-m-a-n.

It's only money . . .

russell baker

Here is the monthly electricity bill. It is for $99.61. Should I feel amused or antiquated? At this rate, electricity for the coming year will cost me $1,195.32. The take-home pay for a full year from my first 40-hour-week job came to $1,279.20. Today this would be enough to pay my electricity bill in full and leave me $83.88 at the end of the year. I would probably spend the $83.88 before the year ended, a week at a time. This way I would have $1.61 a week for food and rent. Even with that kind of money, it would be frivolous to splurge on clothing.

Well, the year I took home $1,279.20 was 1947, and money was different then. If somebody had told me I would some day be paying that whole year's salary, less $83.88, for electricity, I would have said, "Quit spoofing me, I'm a busy man."

There was an older reporter working for my paper at that time who had served with the Marines in China after World War II. He used to tell of people packing suitcases with Chinese currency before going to a restaurant to buy dinner. I believed very little of this then. Now, however, I never carry cash when headed for a restaurant. The necessary bulk inside my suit would make me appear to be wearing a three-month supply of underwear.

Instead, I carry a slim credit card, the sight of which reduces the most arrogant headwaiter to a cringing toady. With this powerful plastic I dine on spaghetti and veal washed down with Sicilian wine, feed a guest similarly and stride out aware that I have just spent almost three weeks' salary, 1947-style, to pleasure the innards.

So long as you keep the 1947 base pay in mind, inflation is a delight. Three weeks' salary on dinner for two! Diamond Jim Brady never feasted more wantonly.

My sense of money derives partly from the even more ancient era of the Great Depression, when I had an uncle who made $5,000 a year. He was regarded in the family as a rich man. He wore a suit and necktie to work, had his own desk in a bank, commanded a secretary, owned a summer house and a boat, rented a floor in a town house, drove a Buick with a rumble seat and ate in restaurants that had potted palms and musicians in tuxedos who played waltzes during dinner.

Five thousand dollars a year. The sum was beyond fantasy. Even today that uncle could pay my electricity bill and have $3,804.68 left over. That would be enough to buy half of a very small Buick, without a rumble seat.

Growing up with a $5,000-a-year mentality has its advantages in an age of galloping prices. That uncle, whom I still think of as a Mellon, a Rockefeller, a Gulbenkian, would collapse in awe of my annual grocery bill today. "Think you're rich, uncle? Hah! Look at me here in the checkout line paying $5 for a half pound of steak and a half pound of steak fat."

My purpose here is not to strike the old geezer pose, but to encourage the young. If inflation is eternal, as all the evidence indicates, present-day wages and prices will seem, 32 years hence, the bench-mark of a sound currency, as my uncle's $5,000 salary and my own $1,279.20 now seem to me.

Assume, for example, that the cost of electricity over the next 32 years rises as it has over the past 32 years, so that a person who started in the late 1940s now pays a bill almost exactly equivalent to his starting wage.

This means a person starting now at $300 a week — with a gross pay of $15,600 per year — will by the year 2011 be paying about $110,000 a year for electricity. The residue of $600 will then purchase a modest restaurant dinner for two, perhaps. After eating it, the diner of the year 2011 A.D. will feel like a Croesus by reflecting that if anybody had told him back in 1979 that he would some day be paying $600 for dinner, he would have said, "Quit spoofing me, I'm a busy man."

By that time, of course, this diner will have a child, whose college tuition is $150,000 a year and who is insistent about receiving a $110,000 gift to make a down payment on a new car.

This child can be made to pay in boredom as he is forced to listen to tales of the good old days when electricity was only $99.61 a month, when you could buy a half pound of beef fat for only $2.50. Yes, inflation may seem to cast a dark cloud over the future, but every cloud has a plastic lining.

I wonder if the electric people will cut off the juice if they don't get the $99.61 this month. The oil people are starting to get suspiciously testy. Oh, they wouldn't. It's only money.

10% hike in school budget

A 1980 provisional budget running neck-and-neck with the rate of inflation was approved Tuesday by Greater Victoria school trustees.

The $55.2 million budget, which was adopted virtually unchanged after a week's debate, represents a 10.6 per cent increase from 1979's anticipated outlay.

The document was prepared earlier than usual this year at request of the education ministry and will be considered further before a final version is adopted in the new year.

Some additions to the budget almost balanced deletions, leaving little net change from the proposals submitted by the superintendent, secretary-treasurer and other administrative heads.

Administrators proposed spending $54.4 million to continue current programs plus $1 million for expansion.

Teacher salaries again account for the largest part of spending, or most of the instruction budget of $38 million, up $3.2 million including a forecast wage increase of 8.5 per cent which has still to be negotiated.

Trustees consented to a 42-per-cent hike in the instruction-curriculum section, which would raise spending by $500,000 million next year.

Major parts of the budget include the secretary-treasurer's account of $8.8 million (up from an expected $7.9 million this year); instruction-curriculum $1.5 million ($1 million); pupil services $1.2 million ($900,000).

The question of affiliation with B.C. School Trustees' Association recurred when trustees balked at a $35,000 item representing fees for the coming year. District 61 opted out of the association in 1977 on grounds it was not getting its money's worth of service, but rejoined last year.

Trustee Mark Fisher moved deletion of the fee and said he could not justify that kind of spending to taxpayers, considering the material the BCSTA puts out and the representation it offers.

He figured it cost taxpayers $100 every time the association mails something to trustees.

"If you want to get another couple of teachers for $35,000, okay. But not the BCSTA. They are simply not worth it."

Trustee Susan Brice said the information BCSTA sends out is less relevant than it was when the board dropped out.

Trustee Peter Yorke said the mailings he gets are "horrible, useless, garbage," but he consented to staying in if the material sent to the secretary-treasurer is useful.

Secretary-treasurer Carl Warner said when he was involved with other districts in salary negotiations before district 61 rejoined he felt the odd man out because he did not have access to information other secretary-treasurers had via BCSTA.

Chairman Carol Pickup said research material is of great use to the administrator in connection with hiring, zero-base budgetting, problems of declining enrolment and funding. It was also important for trustees to have a collective voice in provincial education.

Trustee John Young agreed there was an advantage to the association in maintaining a balance between schools and the education ministry.

Among the last items to be considered were grants in fees for service to community organizations with links to schools.

Warehouse School Society will get $77,610; James Bay Community Project $26,560; Victoria Symphony Society $25,000; McPherson Playhouse $21,780; Kaleidoscope Theatre $5,000; Kiwanis School Safety Patrol $2,000, and Capital Region Safety Council $1,700.

The total $159,650 is up $100,000 from this year.

A partial return to centralized purchasing, warehousing and distribution of school supplies was approved after debate.

Trustees abandoned the concept two years ago, but with reduced enrolments and clerical staff in schools, plus long delays in closing accounts with suppliers, the board agreed to hire new staff at its distribution centre to overcome the problem.

Contract awarded

Herb Bate Ltd. of Victoria has been awarded a $177,000 contract for expansion of the Long Harbor Ferry Terminal on Salt Spring Island, the B.C. Ferry Corp. said Monday.

B.C. mining paid over $192 million in taxes last year.

During 1978, the B.C. mining industry paid over $110 million in taxes to our province, plus more than $69 million in federal taxes. Mining taxation is also felt at the local level...with over $13 million in municipal taxes paid by the industry last year.* That's a total of over $192 million, or about $75 for every British Columbian. As an important source of tax revenues for our province—and as a large scale job-producer—mining is a major contributor to the B.C. economy.

Couvelier, challenger square off over development

MACGREGOR

Mayor Mel Couvelier and his challenger Keith MacGregor, an avowed greenbelt protector, clashed Tuesday night at a Saanich all-candidates' meeting at the Imperial Inn.

The 11 aldermanic candidates also were almost evenly divided into pro and anti-development camps.

MacGregor, a political newcomer, said he decided to run to protest the mayor's well-intentioned but misguided planning policies.

Couvelier argued for "free enterprise based on competition."

He defended council's controversial tax-base-broadening projects . . . the Tillicum shopping centre, Royal Oak industrial park and Minnie Mountain mixed-housing development.

Saanich will never have wall-to-wall housing outside the urban containment boundary, Couvelier said, because good planning will shift development to the western communities in 10 or 15 years.

MacGregor, a retired brigadier-general, is supported by community groups opposed to industrial and commercial growth.

He wants to see Saanich's 76,000 population levelled off at 90,000 and its rural atmosphere preserved.

Saanich should co-operate with Victoria, even to the point of merging services such as fire and police protection, he suggested.

MacGregor's promise to look at amalgamation if elected got a sharp response from Couvelier.

The mayor said amalgamation doesn't save money and or improve services, just creates "a bureaucratic monster impossible to control."

A strong pro-development stance was also taken by former mayor Ed Lum who said he is running for alderman.

Lum said the tax base must increase in proportion to inflation or expenditures will overtake income.

Robert Bowcott, John MacGregor, Judy Nyquist, and Don Smith also identified themselves as pro-development candidates.

Bowcott said he was dissatisfied with the current "backbiting" and "obvious political bias" on council.

John MacGregor, a businessman, said he wants continued development and broadening of the tax base.

Public disclosure should be made of all election contributions over $100, he said. He is also willing to discuss limiting campaign spending.

Nyquist, executive-director of the B.C. Lions Society for Crippled Children, listed the underprivileged, disabled, elderly and the young as her priorities.

Smith, a Blenkinsop Valley resident, wants to see a more organized council and priority given to zoning and planning.

Ald. Geoff Vantreight described himself as a farmer-businessman interested in preserving agricultural land.

Saanich has more farmland than it knows what to do with and most of it isn't used to grow food, he said. But high costs of shipping produce into the community will force the land into production within 15 years.

Ald. Howard Sturrock said he is running on his record and will work toward community planning and protecting neighborhoods.

Former alderman Robert Cameron, a defeated NDP candidate in the Esquimalt-Saanich riding this year, called himself a progressive conservative who believes in community participation in municipal government, sensible planning and limited growth.

Kim Geddes, a UVic student, described himself as a "rural moderate" candidate concerned with conserving the community's heritage.

Muriel Overgaard, an administrative secretary who is also president of the B.C. region of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, said her administrative experience and decision-making ability could help council improve its "parliamentary procedure."

COUVELIER

Butchart bus link backed

Saanich council has approved a regular summer bus between downtown Victoria and Butchart Gardens.

Conmac Enterprises Ltd., a company formed by two men who own several large coaches, told council Monday the endorsement will help when it makes an application to the provincial government.

If approved, the service will run every two hours from downtown and make regular stops in Saanich on its way to and from the tourist attraction.

Conmac proposes to operate the bus service between May and September.

The inter-municipal committee recommended denying approval because it said the bus run would give little benefit to the core municipalities.

Love that forecast!

It will be warm by day and frosty by night for the rest of the week, the local weather office said today.

Afternoon temperatures will be unseasonably warm but near 0° C. in early morning. No rain is forecast.

A record average day-night temperature of 11.2° for Nov. 6 was reported.

Three nabbed by BATvan

Three motorists were charged with impaired driving Tuesday night when the BATvan set up roving roadblocks in Colwood.

The RCMP checked more than 400 vehicles.

OAK BAY
TRAFFIC SAFETY

Oak Bay's record in providing facilities for its citizens, such as parks, the Recreation and Senior Citizens' centres, and the Library, has been excellent.

In some areas, however, we have been lacking. Many of our citizens walk about Oak Bay by day and night to use these and other facilities. We need safe street crossings for all, but especially we must be mindful of the safety of our children and the elderly. We must light and mark our crosswalks clearly throughout Oak Bay, particularly along Oak Bay Avenue and Cadboro Bay Road.

If elected as your Mayor I will see these things are done.

Over-reaction to bridge loss?

Sawmill operators in northeastern B.C. may be over-reacting to an emergency situation created by the destruction of a rail bridge near Fort St. John, Labor Minister Allan Williams said Tuesday.

A number of mills in the Fort Nelson area have threatened shutdowns unless the provincial government provides aid while the bridge is being rebuilt.

"It is difficult to contemplate reduction in forest royalties, stumpages and so on," said Williams, "and any request for subsidy assistance will be based upon an examination of exactly what the situation is.

"I'm afraid sometimes people over-react to emegency situations and on careful examination you find the costs of movement by truck are not excessive compared to cost by rail."

WILLIAMS
. . . examination first

Mayor Doug McPhail of Fort Nelson said the loss of the bridge, destroyed by fire Oct. 21, has resulted in crippling inventories and huge cash drains on the lumber industry.

McPhail said sawmill operators have requested an immediate 10-per-cent reduction in timber royalties.

He said that if an agreement is not reached this week the industry will be forced to shut down on Monday. About 750 forest workers would be affected.

Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm said Fort Nelson area sawmills shouldn't get government assistance because "you can't turn to government" every time there's a low point in business.

"You have to try and work it out," said Vander Zalm. "That's what I was taught in business.

"Bridges get knocked down, trains get derailed, people go on strike, harbors go out of commission. I don't think government can jump in every time there is some sort of a difficult situation."

Laskin home by Saturday

VANCOUVER (CP) — Chief Justice Bora Laskin of the Supreme Court of Canada will be released from St. Paul's Hospital later this week and should be home in Ottawa by Saturday, his doctor said Tuesday.

"I think he would like to get back to work as soon as possible, but I don't know when that will be," Dr. Ross Sharp said.

Laskin, 67, was vacationing here Aug. 22 when he was rushed to hospital for a hernia operation. He was back in surgery Aug. 31 to have an abdominal abcess drained and a small piece of his bowel removed. He had a third operation Oct. 19.

MLAs' apathy on farmland survey rapped

VERNON (CP) — The B.C. Federation of Agriculture says it is exceedingly disappointed with the response to an association request that MLAs state their position on the withdrawal of more than 600 acres of farmland in the Langley area.

Association president Pat Hibbert said 14 of the 57 MLAs responded to the telegram, including eight members of the New Democrat caucus.

The replies from the NDP members all supported the association position that the Langley farmland should not be taken out of the agricultural land reserve as recommended by the Agricultural Land Commission last month.

There were six replies from the 31 government members, of which two were mere confirmations that the telegram had been received, said Hibbert.

Included in the replies was a statement from Environment Minister Rafe Mair supporting the association stance.

The statement said the minister supported the preservation of agricultural land, but he had no comment on the controversial Langley issue.

"But the strongest and what I call the only real supportive statement came from Okanagan North MLA Pat Jordon (a Social Credit member)," Hibbert said.

Hibbert said the response indicates there are more than two-thirds of the MLAs who either don't understand the issue or who "don't perhaps give a damn."

Low subsidies cripple ferries

The future of passenger and freight ferry service to remote communities on B.C.'s northwest coast is being endangered by rising costs and an inadequate federal subsidy, says Transport Minister Alex Fraser.

Under the terms of an agreement signed in 1977, Ottawa pays $8 million a year to the provincial government to subsidize the ferry service to the Queen Charlotte Islands.

The pact also includes a cost-of-living adjustment scale based on Vancouver prices.

The province in turn pays $50 million a year to the B.C. Ferry Corporation to provide the service.

But Fraser said Tuesday the federal contribution is not enough and he has asked for an early meeting with federal Transport Minister Don Mazankoswki to ask for a bigger annual subsidy.

He said $1.5 million is needed immediately to build a new docking facility in the Queen Charlotte Islands.

ASSESSMENT ACT

NOTICE TO NON-PROFIT FRATERNAL ORGANIZATIONS

Regulations under the Assessment Act provide for 1980 assessed values of meeting halls of non-profit fraternal organizations to be based on 14.5% of their actual value instead of at 25% as in the past.

To qualify the land and buildings of the non-profit fraternal organization must be used, or set aside for use, as a meeting hall by the organization for at least 150 days in each year excluding any day that the land and building is also used for:

(i) any purpose by a person or organization that is not a non-profit fraternal organization,
(ii) entertainment where there is an admission charge, or
(iii) the sale or consumption, or both, of alcoholic beverages.

If you think the meeting hall of your organization qualifies for the reduced assessment or if you wish further details on eligibility requirements, please contact your local Area Assessor, or write to the:

Salmon program in troubled waters

OTTAWA (CP) — British Columbia's love affair with the federal salmon enhancement program has hit troubled waters and could be in jeopardy if Ottawa doesn't start hiring full-time researchers and hatchery personnel, Ted Miller, the New Democratic Party fisheries critic, said Tuesday.

The fisheries department is contracting out research and hatcheries operations instead of hiring permanent workers for these jobs, Miller told the Commons fisheries committee.

But the agencies that do the hiring offer low wages and poor job security and most persons quit when their six-month contracts expire. That means regular departmental people must regularly interrupt their own work to train new employees, Miller said.

Don Tansley, the deputy fisheries minister and chairman of the enhancement project, said the treasury board has been made aware of the problems arising from the use of contract employees.

"We've about come to the limit of using contract employees," he said.

Courier makes return as weekly giveaway

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Courier, which ceased publication as a daily newspaper earlier this year, will be back in circulation Thursday as a weekly giveaway.

Editor Geoff Wellens said Tuesday that plans to begin publishing at the end of this year or early in 1980 were stepped up to take advantage of the Chrismas market.

Wellens said the paper will have a circulation of 50,000. As a weekly newspaper distributed on a circulation basis it had a circulation of about 20,000.

Wellens, sports editor when the Courier ceased publication earlier this year, is one of three former Courier employees behind the reappearance of the newspaper.

Wellens said the paper has about six full-time employees, but most of the writing will be done by freelancers. The first paper will have 20 to 24 pages and will be about 60 per cent advertising.

Fish future looks good

VANCOUVER (CP) — Canada aims to hold onto its 1978 position as the world's leading fish and fish product exporter, Dr. Wally Johnson, director-general for the West Coast of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, said Tuesday.

The West Coast fishing industry has been performing well so far this year and getting top dollar for its products, he told a news conference.

UBC names new registrar

VANCOUVER (CP) — Kenneth Gordon Young, 41, has been appointed registrar of the University of British Columbia, effective Jan. 1, 1980. He replaces Jack Parnall, 65, UBC's registrar since 1957. An Edmonton native, Young graduated from the University of Alberta.

Bonds

Tuesday

TORONTO (CP) — Prices were higher in active trading on the Canadian bond market Tuesday.

The firm opening tone Monday turned into a rally which brought prices in the long-term end of the market up three-quarters to seven-eighths of a point.

However, analysts at Wood Gundy said there is little optimism that this is a turning point on interest rates, as the majority of trade was between dealers.

Most of the rally appeared to be short-covering by dealers. They said that although there is somewhat more stability in the market than through most of October, it continues to be nervous and susceptible to significant movement at the slightest provocation.

Day-to-day money was available at 12½ per cent.

Loss of faith in system as harmful as a recession

By AL FORREST

North Americans seem to be losing confidence in all its institutions including governments and the banking system, Xerox of Canada vice president Peter Brophey said Tuesday.

Brophey said in an interview here escalating oil costs and high inflation rates have created widespread discontent that may be more damaging than the economic effects of the recession.

"There is no doubt Americans have lost confidence in President Carter. And we have just overturned the government in Canada. There is evidence of a loss of confidence everywhere."

He said people are looking for new answers and decisive leadership.

Brophey's comments came at the official opening of a new Xerox sales office on the fifth floor of the Royal Bank Building at 707 Fort. The office will have 28 employees, including a machine servicing staff of 17.

Brophey said there is no doubt the continent is heading into a deep recession.

"They say the last one was mild, shaped like a saucer. Well, we're in the soup bowl this time."

Interest rates are alarmingly high, he said, adding companies must be wondering why they are in business when they can put large sums in the bank and collect up to 15 per cent interest.

Brophey said however, that Xerox is not reducing its business activity and has not detected any reduction in demand so far.

Customers have continued to order new products and in some lines there is a waiting list.

Peter Findlay of Vancouver, the company's western region manager, said Xerox has responded to the recession by adopting belt-tightening measures.

The company is emphasizing no-frill small machines along with its high-volume lines.

By keeping costs in check, sales should remain constant even if the economy worsens, Findlay said.

The company, which is rated by industry observers as having between 50 and 60 per cent of the market, is making a comeback in small machines after encountering stiff competition from Japanese brands.

The firm's 2600 model, designed to make as few as 1,000 copies a month, was introduced this year and an even smaller model, the 2300, will be in Western Canada early next year.

Brophey said the company continues to increase sales revenues by about 15 to 20 per cent per year.

Color reproduction has not been a big seller for the company, although the technology is well-advanced, he said.

"Most of the volume is in business offices and black-and-white will always be the office colors. Some specialists working with grapics and advertising copy use color but it is a small portion of the total volume and always will be."

More interesting, he said, are recent computer developments whereby tape can be inserted and finished copies received.

In fact, a letter can be typed in Western Canada, put into a central circuit and copies run off in Toronto, he said.

"We think this is a pretty exciting development."

Office workers who fear they will be displaced by machines should take heart because there is a great and growing demand for word processers, he said.

In Vancouver, the demand far exceeds the supply.

"The word secretary may soon disappear from the language. Accountants no longer are just bookkeepers and junior female employees are finding their jobs elevated and enlarged through the use of machines."

Repetition and drudgery will be almost eliminated from the office routine, he said.

GM cuts dividend as sales lag

Times News Services

General Motors Corp. has reduced its dividend rate for the second consecutive year and Chrysler Corp. announced a new program of $300 rebates to help sell cars, as the U.S. auto industry reported a 20 per cent decline in late October sales.

In an announcement that came after the stock markets closed Monday, GM said its directors had approved a special year-end dividend of $1.50 a share on common stock — a dollar a share less than at this time last year.

Noting that GM's performance this year "has been influenced by the over-all slowing in the pace of economic growth," Chairman Thomas Murphy and President Elliott Estes said in a statement that the dividend takes into account the current outlook as well as capital needs of the nation's largest industrial corporation.

But analysts said the GM decision would be taken by investors as a sign of recession, even though the company's officers emphasized their belief that normal auto-buying patterns will return in 1980, which a "strenghtening economy."

GM's announcement means that the company's common stock dividend this year will be $5.30 a share compared with $6 in 1978 and a record $6.80 in 1977. In previous quarters this year, GM paid $1 in March, $1.15 plus a special of 50 cents in June and $1.15 in September. In effect, Monday's announcement indicates a regular dividend of $1.15 plus a special payout of 35 cents, payable Dec. 10 to owners of record Nov. 15.

Wall Street analysts had been forcasting several months ago that GM's full-year dividend would total about $6.60 a share but an earnings statement from the company last week — showing third-quarter profits down 96 per cent to $22 million compared with the 1978 — was a considerable surprise.

Without a $121 million credit, the result of lowering an estimate of income taxes due for the first nine months, GM would have reported a loss.

Ronald Glantz, an auto industry analyst at Paine Webber in New York, said Monday night that the GM announcement will "momentarily influence stock prices but it shouldn't cause people to ignore the fact that GM has serious operational problems...Ford is worse and Chrysler is in the process of going bankrupt."

At a time when the auto industry is not earning enough money to modernize itself, GM can squeeze its dividends, Ford can borrow money and "Chrysler can't do either," he stated. By backing loan guarantees to keep Chrysler in business, the government is only making the situation worse, Glantz argued.

Meanwhile, in Canada, sales of 1980-model cars and trucks got off to a promising start last month, with most companies reporting increased demand for their products.

Beneath the royalty lurks a complex woman

LONDON (FP) — Princess Anne is coming to Canada for a week-long tour on behalf of the Save the Children Fund, of which she is world president. At Buckingham Palace, in an exclusive interview with FP News Service, she made several key points about aid organizations. Among them:

—On the single greatest need in aid programs: "Freedom from political pressure. I shall probably get into trouble for saying that."

—On not trying to do too much: "The Fund's approach is basic. They are there on a basic level, to instill basic cleanliness, basic nourishment, basic mothering care . . . you're not trying to instill some tremendous technology."

—On the advantage of voluntary organizations: "People feel less threatened — perhaps that's the wrong word — less overpowered."

—On only going where asked: "The Number One criterion is that any mother-and-child situation is something we can cope with, and we offer our services; we never go thundering in where, you know, we think we might be needed."

—On whether motherhood has affected her attitude: "No. My involvement is a thought-out process, and hasn't been determined by any emotional conditions."

Anne on rainy Bahamas day last month

By WALTER STEWART
FP News Service

LONDON — On mature consideration, I wouldn't want to be a princess after all. The pay and perks are fine, the working conditions excellent and the bowing and scraping satisfactory, but the job has fearful drawbacks.

I found out about some of them at Buckingham Palace, interviewing Princess Anne on the eve of her week-long tour of Canada. She was not at all what I expected.

I had been led by a vigilant press to expect a sulky, spoiled young mother whose sole interests revolved around her husband, Capt. Mark Phillips, her son, Peter, their vast estate at Minchinhampton in the Cotswolds and, as one British journalists put it, "anything with four legs and a tail."

I found instead a somewhat tense woman of 29, who kept sliding her rings up and down her finger and flashing a hesitant smile. Her speech was guarded, until she got onto her subject, the Save the Children Fund, when she displayed real knowledge and a cool, calculated concern. There was nothing of the Lady Bountiful about her, and nothing of the spoiled brat, either.

At first, her voice was high and regal, broken by an occasional nervous giggle, but as she warmed to the topic, her voice dropped and amusement came out as a throaty chuckle.

When the tape recorder was turned off, she became much more animated and, while never directly knocking the press — it's not done — did manage to suggest that our attentions assure that the regal life is not all beer and skittles.

I asked her about an incident in Oslo last year. News reports had it that, during a hospital visit for Save the Children, the princess had deliberately turned her back on a child who was holding his arms out for a hug. "Anne Snubbed Sick Child", is what the headlines said.

What actually happened, she said, was that "The little chap only spoke Norwegian and the doctor had in fact already introduced him, and translated what he said and he was then talking about someone else in the corner."

When she turned to where the child was gesturing, the cameras caught her "snubbing" the child.

"It was one of those cases where the saying that the camera never lies was itself a falsehood . . . We heard that there were hundreds of calls (of protest), but we understand there was, in fact, one."

She thinks the incident was blown up because "Somebody who wanted to get into the room couldn't." (A journalist, of course.)

Her Royal Higness commented on two other incidents involving the press.

"There was a story that we lived in a mansion with 83 rooms. Counting every loo and cupboard, I could only get it up to 35, and I mentioned that, but I don't know if it will do any good.

"Then there was the story about my swimming pool for the horses. It was actually a water-box.

"We use water treatment when horses have sore or bruised legs. You can use a hose, but it's very labor-intensive and frightfully boring. So in one stable box, we put the floor down about two feet below level, and then you put in a sort of slab and that forms a small pool for the horse to stand in. It's very common, but that came out as a swimming pool.

"I suppose it looked better in a headline."

That the princess has problems with the press is clear. A London Daily Express columnist recently lambasted her "arrogance, moroseness and increasing unpopularity with the public, on whom she tends to wipe her riding boots."

It is also clear that some of her problems are avoidable. She and her husband have been collared frequently for speeding their sportscars, which suggests that they either don't know the speed law or choose not to obey it.

Then there was the matter of Capt Philipps' decision last month to accept $150,000 in sponsorship for his stable of show-jumping horses from British Leyland, at a time when the state-owned auto firm is laying off 25,000 workers.

Phillips' explanation — "We are a young couple with a mortgage" — did not go down well. They are, in fact, a young couple with a $160,000 annual income from Parliament, and a $2 million estate, the gift of the Queen, and they could scarcely have picked a worse time to raid the till of a cash-starved Crown corporation.

It is possible to be regal, or to drive a shrewd bargain. Not both.

The problem with being a princess is that you are in the celebrity game, along with O.J. Simpson, Howard Cossell, Jane Fonda and Gordon Sinclair, but under entirely different rules. They are encouraged to express themselves, even on matters they know nothing of, but royalty is not. They are paid to be outrageous, but royalty is not. They are forgiven dumb mistakes, but royalty is not.

Every word Princess Anne says is weighed for content, and if she strays into frankness, or even common sense, she is courting trouble. Every look and gesture is weighed against public expectation, and as she goes her round of bazaar openings, official receptions and court occasions, she must carry herself as warily as a cat in an alley full of small boys with slingshots. She could yawn herself onto the front pages.

Her moments of privacy are few — and saleable for anyone who can find out about them — and when she is in public, she is the prey of press and lunatics.

One such lunatic fired several shots into her car in 1974, and wounded four people. A fawn in a forest gets to relax more than a princess in a palace.

When she takes on substantive work, as in Save the Children, she is open to criticism as a do-gooder; when she concentrates on peripheral pursuits, like riding, she is dismissed as shallow.

It is hard to see how someone in Princess Anne's role could escape a certain haughtiness — the bowing and scraping invite it — but it is easy to see that behind the protective layers there lurks a woman who is a good deal more intelligent, complex and concerned than we are ever likely to meet in public.

Tourists leave Bolivian strife

LA PAZ (UPI) — Hundreds of foreign tourists were airlifted out of Bolivia and thousands of armed troops occupied the capital's downtown streets today in a masive show of force against a widespread general strike.

The 504 tourists, mainly American, German and French, were escorted by soldiers with machine guns and cannon-mounted military armored cars to the El Alto airport for the flight Tuesday to Lima.

The flight aboard the government-owned Lloyd Bolivian Airlines preceded a promise by the country's new military leader, Col. Alberto Natusch Busch, to open normal international air operations at the airport.

The military government ordered the army to take over civilian bus routes today to transport workers to their jobs in a move to break the strike called by the Bolivian Workers Central to protest Natusch's military coup last Thursday.

The state-controlled television guaranteed viewers that today would be a normal business day and urged striking bankers to cash paycheques issued in October so residents could buy much- needed groceries.

The Bolivian economy's total shutdown since the coup that ousted the civilian government of President Walter Guevara Arze has created increasingly serious shortages of basic necessities such as milk and gasoline.

The strike was violently suppressed earlier this week when jets strafed La Paz and army tanks were used to disperse protesters.

Soccer team nabs suspects

Two car prowlers picked the wrong bunch to rob Tuesday night.

The teenagers — 15 and 16 — were spotted rifling a car owned by a member of a soccer team working out at Lambrick Park.

The pair fled across the field with the team in hot pursuit and were grabbed after trying to hide in a nearby yard.

Saanich police took the youths into custody and said they will appear in family court on theft charges.

Officers later recovered two car radios, a tape deck, 50 tapes, two tape cases and a tacometer from the suspects' homes.

Following the incident, police asked car owners attending a baseball bingo in nearby Lambrick Park centre to check their autos.

Police said Orie Le Bus, 3497 Diana, who was helping run the bingo, found everything in order but when he returned to his car after the bingo he discovered it had been broken into and a tape deck yanked from under the dash.

"That's what you call gall," a police spokesman said.

Military police attacked by youth

Two military policemen narrowly escaped injury after a youth tried to attack them with a switchblade in Belmont Park early today.

An Armed Forces spokesman said the officers were on routine patrol through the military personnel subdivision about 2:15 a.m. when they spotted three youths near the John Stubbs School.

They stopped them for questioning and were searching one of them when they discovered the switchblade in one of his pockets.

The youth grabbed the knife and started to swing at the officers.

The officers wrestled the youth to the ground but during the scuffle the two others fled.

The Colwood RCMP dog squad was called in and found the youths hiding in bushes.

Charges of assault with a deadly weapon and possession of a prohibited weapon are pending, the military spokesman said.

3,500-foot outfall by next Oct.?

The controversial Clover Point outfall could be built and ready to use by Oct. 1, 1980, if the Capital Regional Board ratifies action taken today by its south coast sewerage committee.

The committee decided to go ahead with a 3,500-foot outfall, scrapping plans made about 10 years ago to extend the outfall 6,900 feet.

The committee authorized $14,780 for the firm of CH2M Hill Canada Ltd. of Calgary, Vancouver and Seattle, to prepare technical information to accompany an application for a construction certificate from the Pollution Control Branch.

After the meeting chairman Bob Wright said the application is expected to be in the hands of the PCB by Dec. 20 and working drawings ready by Jan. 15.

He said it is hoped to go to tender on April 1 with construction starting July 1.

Wright said the project will cost the taxpayers of Victoria, Oak Bay and Saanich an estimated $3 million, depending on whether steel or plastic is used for the pipe.

He said this will mean a saving of approximately $5 million as compared with the original plans.

He said the PCB is in agreement with the intention to build a 3,500-foot outfall and establish a monitoring system.

CH2M Hill Canada Ltd. representative Steven Lackey told the committee that building a pipe longer than 3,500 feet is not necessary as there would be no significant improvement of water quality.

"We're confident that monitoring will show we will have achieved the desired result," Wright said.

Hidden costs of the outfall lie in litigation now before the courts, however. H.B. Contracting Ltd. of Surrey is bringing an action against the CRD for halting its contract on the uncompleted pipe. The CRD is also taking two design companies to court, claiming negligence.

$10,000 richer

Victorian Don South is $10,000 richer thanks to the Provincial lottery.

South, a highways planner, of 2890 Ashley, held a winning ticket on the Oct. 28 draw.

Two other B.C. residents also won $10,000 prizes in the draw. They are Clara Whitaker of Nanaimo and Dolores Myles of Vancouver.

Cave-in cut-off

Phone service in the Cadboro Bay area was knocked out this morning after a cave-in at a road construction project on Cadboro Bay Road. The area affected was east of the project and north of Cranmore.

Late supper of roast chicken —almost

Flames from the shed had spread to the outside of a nearby chicken coop when Saanich firemen arrived shortly after 7 p.m.

Woods said firemen doused the blaze and his chickens were still sitting on their perches clucking away as if nothing had happened.

Fraud sentence stands

VANCOUVER (CP) — A bankrupt city businessman who went on a spending spree with money from one of his companies deposited by another firm will go to jail, a B.C. Supreme Court judge has ruled.

Mr. Justice Kenneth Meredith reaffirmed Tuesday the order to jail David Robert Beach for 40 days. Beach had appealed the judge's August decision on a charge of intent to defraud Microwave Cablevision Ltd.

Microwave had been awarded a $350,000 judgment against Beach.

Mr. Justice Meredith found that Beach, before declaring bankruptcy, withdrew $227,000 from his company's bank account.

IT CAN HAPPEN HERE.

The energy crisis isn't something that happens somewhere else. Not any more. Vancouver Island faces a possible shortage of electrical energy now. There's no way Hydro can solve it alone. We need your help.

What's going on here?

Vancouver Island is outgrowing its supply of electrical energy. Since 1964, the average annual growth in electrical demand has been nearly 9%. Peak time (5:00 - 7:00 p.m.) electrical requirements have almost doubled in the past ten years. Last winter's peak use came uncomfortably close to the Island's total electrical capacity.

Where do we all stand now?

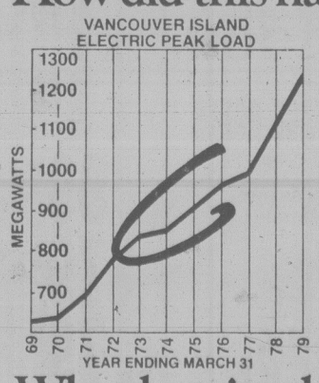
We could face problems this winter if Hydro customers on Vancouver Island continue to increase electrical use at the present rate. AND HYDRO HAS NO OTHER POWER RESOURCES TO TURN TO UNTIL 1983 AT THE EARLIEST.

The Island generating stations are already operating at near-peak capacity, generating 30% of the Island's electricity supplied by Hydro. That exhausts the last of the Island's own economic sources of electricity. The other 70% is being "imported" from the mainland by submarine cables and these are now loaded to capacity.

Two additional submarine lines from Cheekye to Dunsmuir (Squamish to Qualicum) will solve our Island power problems until well into the 1990's. But the first of these lines cannot be put into service before 1983 at the earliest. That means we still face a possible shortage each winter until then. An unusually cold winter could increase the Island load beyond our capacity to supply it.

First in a series of messages to inform Vancouver Island people about the possible shortage of electrical energy, and effective methods of conserving energy to reduce demand.

How did this happen?



After 1972 the rate of load increase on Vancouver Island slowed down. In response to this slackening in the economy, Hydro deferred some costly expansion called for by earlier forecasts. When the economy suddenly picked up again, so did the growing demand for electrical energy.

Why does it take so long?

Planning of major electrical projects is a highly technical and lengthy process. It also involves a long period of discussion with residents, municipal governments and other government bodies. In the case of the Cheekye-Dunsmuir submarine power lines, needed to bring the Island's power supply back up to strength, these discussions have been going on for over two years.

What can we do about it?

Hydro can increase the supply but not in time to avert a possible electrical energy shortage. But you can reduce the demand now. Especially during the daily peak use period from 5:00-7:00 p.m. For instance, hot water is one of the prime energy users at peak load time. And many tasks—washing dishes, washing clothes, taking a shower—could be done outside of that critical 5:00-7:00 p.m. period.

City company cleared of rental discrimination

A Victoria company has been cleared by B.C. Supreme Court of a finding of discrimination by a board of inquiry established under the Human Rights Code.

Mr. Justice Martin Taylor, in a written judgment, allowed the appeal by Byron Price and Associates Ltd. and directed the board established by Labor Minister Allan Williams to dismiss the complaint against the company.

A native Indian couple, Alex and Nella Nelson, complained that rental of a suite in a townhouse at 4061 Larchwood in Gordon Head was denied them in July, 1976. The human rights board of inquiry ruled in December, 1977, that townhouse manageress Loretta Gubbins and Byron Price and Associates Ltd., rental agent of the building, discriminated against them and awarded $150 damages.

Taylor said the principal question was whether, and under what circumstances, an employer may be held vicariously liable for discrimination on the part of its employee, constituting a breach of the Human Rights Code.

He noted that there was no finding by the board that the company directed, condoned or adopted the conduct of Mrs. Gubbins.

Taylor ruled that he could not disturb the finding of the board that a master and servant relationship existed between Mrs. Gubbins and the company.

He also ruled that the inquiry board's conclusion that the company was liable for damages for a breach of the code by its employee was in error "for the reason that the statute does not by its terms impose vicarious liability on an employer not shown in any way at fault, and because common law relief, if available in respect of such a breach, cannot be granted by such a tribunal as a board of inquiry."

There was no basis in law for the assertion that the Human Rights Code authorized the imposition of vicarious liability on an employer for damages arising out of breach of its terms by an employee.

The board of inquiry was not a court having jurisdiction to grant common law relief.

Taylor emphasized, in his judgment, that the appeal of Mrs. Gubbins was not before him and has yet to be dealt with and the issues on that appeal may be quite different from those argued before him in the case of Byron Price and Associates Ltd.

No bias, says Saanich

Judgment was reserved in B.C. Supreme Court Tuesday on a bid by a development company to quash a Saanich bylaw which switched zoning on 1.5 acres in Gordon Head to single-family residential from limited commercial.

Plans by Belvedere Estates Ltd. to build a 30,000-square-foot office-retail building at the northwest corner of Blair and Larchwood adjacent to Blair Park ran into public opposition earlier this year.

Later, council rezoned the site, and several other limited commercial areas.

The company claimed the action was discriminatory, unreasonable, done in bad faith and was economic downzoning.

This was denied by Saanich, whose lawyer, Brian Smith, told Mr. Justice Victor Dryer that council has a right to review and change zoning provided it does not thwart one person.

He said the zoning change affected other limited commercial areas and that the the world had changed in Gordon Head between 1964 and 1979. The area had become built up with houses and the residents were concerned last February, when the proposed development came up, because they did not want commercial development in their front yard.

The fact that council dealt with other limited commercial zones showed good faith and no discrimination against only Belvedere Estates Ltd, he said. Council was carrying out comprehensive planning in the public interest.

Inquest expected in woman's death

Sidney coroner John Davidge is expected to set a date later this week for an inquest into the death of a 71-year-old Saanich woman who died Friday after being hit by a truck on the Beacon Avenue wharf.

Alice Mattick, wife of well-known Saanich farmer Bill Mattick, 5273 Cordova Bay, was walking from her car towards the Satellite Fish Plant when she was hit by a company truck driven by Kim Hayward, 23, of 111-2296 Henry, police said.

The accident occurred at 1:05 p.m.

Mrs. Mattick was pronounced dead on arrival at Saanich Peninsula Hospital a few minutes later.

Clark and IWA to talk layoffs

International Woodworkers of America officials have accepted an invitation by Prime Minister Joe Clark to discuss possible back-to-work action in the near future.

Clark made the offer Tuesday during the daily Commons question period after Burnaby NDP MP Svend Robinson asked him what he could do to help the 700 employees of Weldwood Ltd., the country's largest plywood manufacturer.

Robinson told Clark that the plant's manager said high interest rates are like a drug which cures the disease but kills the patient.

Plywood company officials say the domestic housing market has slumped dramatically since interest rates were raised by the Bank of Canada, Robinson said.

"Winter is traditionally a bad time for these guys but they've always been able to keep the men at work," he said.

The government should reduce interest rates to prevent more layoffs and help business through the slump, Robinson said.

Disabled transit aid limits fare to $1

The provincial government has agreed to subsidize the Lions' special buses for the handicapped and other transit services for the disabled.

The decision means users will never have to pay more than $1 a ride.

Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm announced today that the handicapped will never have to pay more than 10 per cent of the actual cost of a trip.

The Lions recently boosted the fare for a handicapped adult riding in their buses to $7. Next month it was to go to $14.

Their buses were designed for crippled children but adults had been accommodated as well. The Lions said they could no longer subsidize them.

Special grants are to be provided by the government through the Urban Transit Authority for handicapped transit services which would see B.C. picking up almost 85 per cent of the total operating cost.

The remainder will be paid — in Victoria and Vancouver — by the regional districts, and elsewhere by the local municipality.

The regular transit formula requires passengers to pay at least 35 per cent of operating costs at the farebox while the B.C. government picks up 75 per cent of the rest and the regional district the remaining 25 per cent.

For handicapped transit, B.C. will pay additional grants equal to 25 per cent of the amount collected at the farebox, meaning the fare for a handicapped individual will be only 10 per cent of the actual cost.

Vander Zalm's ministerial assistant, Don Lidstone, said today the formula means a handicapped person will never have to pay more than about $1 a ride.

Vander Zalm said there are some 13,600 handicapped persons in the province who would use such transit services — 1,600 in the Victoria area, 9,000 in Vancouver and another 3,000 elsewhere in B.C.

In Vancouver and Victoria, the operator will probably continue to be the Lions with their 15-passenger vans, but smaller communities will need different types of vehicles.

Lidstone said the municipal affairs ministry would also provide special grants to design custom transit services for the handicapped in these areas.

Man dies in plunge

City police are investigating the early-morning death of an elderly resident of James Bay Lodge, 336 Simcoe.

A police spokesman said the unidentified 80-year-old man apparently fell from a third-floor window.

An employee arriving for work at the lodge at 5:40 a.m. discovered the man's body lying face down in a parking lot below the window.

No dice Levesque: premiers

impression that first and foremost the term means the separation of Quebec from the rest of Canada. The white paper confirms this impression."

The four premiers added, however, that major changes are clearly necessary in the federal system.

"The western premiers made it plain that they are opposed to the status quo in Canadian federalism and are committed to working towards constitutional changes within the framework of the federation.

"In the past, the federal system has proved very flexible and has been able to accommodate a great deal of change. The premiers are convinced that the aspirations of Quebecers can be accommodated within the system."

The statement said Canada is embarking on "a new and challenging era" which can provide all Canadians, including Quebecers, with "a rewarding and prosperous future."

"The western premiers are confident that, in a spirit of good will, all Canadians can continue to build on our strength and accommodate our inherent diversity to ensure that Canada's full potential will be realized. The Western premiers invited the province of Quebec to actively share in that process."

In Victoria, Bennett said it is the responsibility of all the provinces as well as the federal government to make sure the people of Quebec as well as those living in other parts of the country understand all the facts about the Quebec situation.

The message should go out to those in Quebec that "we want you to be a part of Canada, as individuals and as a province."

Bennett said should Quebec separate there will be no special deals on energy or in other areas.

"If they left it would be with sadness on my part but they would be treated as a friendly country."

In Winnipeg, Lyon said Quebec independence is a "non-negotiable item."

"We're knocking the blocks out from under (Levesque). We've said that if (he) wants to negotiate independence, go ahead, but don't expect us to provide lubrication for (his) new state.

Lyon said there would be no talks on the possibility of a customs union, trade arrangement or joint monetary devices.

In Edmonton, Intergovernmental Affairs Minister Dick Johnston said the western premiers have stated their opposition to Quebec separation on previous occasions, and with today's statement "there'll not be any uncertainty in the minds of Quebec as to how the western provinces stand."

"I think at this point, while all the provinces will have an opportunity to deal with the contents of the white paper that Quebec has tabled, at this point a restatement of the position will certainly get the attention of the people in Quebec."

The Alberta minister said the western provinces are anxious to see constitutional changes.

"But I don't think it's a plea. I think it's an indication that there are other ways in which Confederation can work.

Pinehurst: Its substantial past and present shabbiness illustrate the central problem for the conservation movement

The heritage dilemma

Carole Bergh wants to save Pinehurst by using a little known bylaw

By NORMAN GIDNEY

THE HOUSE sits on an acre of property in James Bay, an island of calm surrounded by smaller homes and apartment blocks.

It was a grand mansion built for American lumber tycoon William J. Macaulay and its imposing turreted tower still commands the Dallas Road waterfront, a landmark visible even out to sea.

The 18-room house had a fireplace in each room, some decorated with tiles illustrating scenes from the novels of Walter Scott, as well as one of the first central heating systems in the city.

There was a drawing room, library, music room, another for billiards and a large dining room. Some of the ceilings had hand-painted frescoes. Upstairs, the master bedroom extended into the tower and above it was an attic lookout with a view of Juan de Fuca Strait and the Olympic mountains.

But today, Pinehurst is in sad shape. Outside, the paint is peeling, the wood siding and detailed decorations are stained and badly weathered; architectural details are missing. Tangled weeds and long grass grow around the dusty gravel parking lot.

Inside, there is still some original woodwork, panelling and carving and leaded glass. These features and the history of the house and its design prompted authorities to recommend it for heritage designation in 1976, although council decided against it.

This Old House, a book just published by the city on Victoria's heritage houses, says about Pinehurst:

"Although in poor repair, this is one of Victoria's finest buildings in the late Victorian-Picturesque tradition. Known as the Queen Anne style, this fashionable building idiom featured a wealth of decorative detail including gables, turreted towers, balconies, dormers, etc. A high point of the interior is a baronial two-storey entrance hall."

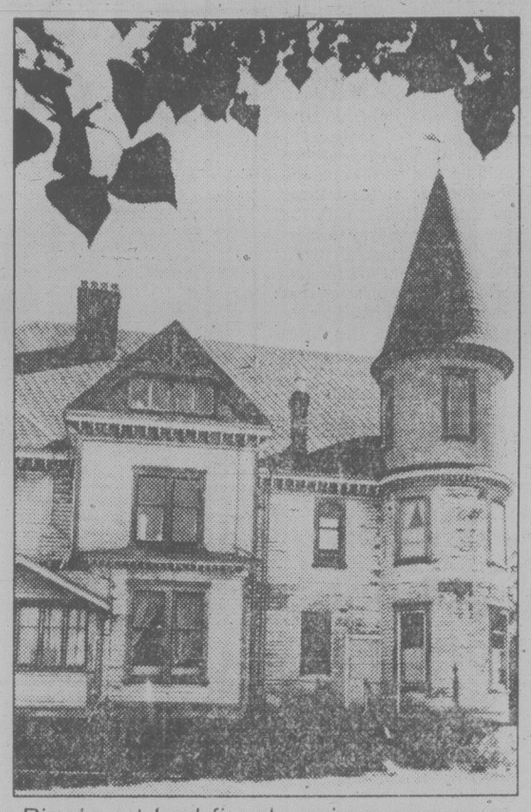
There are six suites on the first and second floors and the owners, Mr. and Mrs. G. Larry Lee, occupy the top floor. The 12 tenants have to share two bathrooms, one to a floor, but the rents are low — only $90 a month for a one-bedroom suite.

One tenant says the interior is in pretty bad shape.

The contrasts between its substantial past and its rather shabby present-day condition illustrate a central problem of the heritage conservation movement.

The dilemma has been highlighted in a research paper by University of Victoria student Carole Bergh which recently won a medal from Heritage Canada.

The house attracted her attention when she lived nearby in James Bay. Curiosity developed into serious research on the history of the house and possible ways of saving it.



Pinehurst had fireplace in every room

Her paper states that in part: North American attitudes towards property are responsible for what has happened to the house.

"Here, where land has until recently been a relatively cheap commodity, the old saying 'A man's home is his castle' has been taken literally.

"It is generally considered that once a person owns a property it is his to do with exactly as he pleases."

The history of Pinehurst is tied up with two prominent Victoria families. Macaulay built Pinehurst for $25,000 which made it one of the most expensive homes in the city in 1889.

He bought timber rights from the Dunsmuirs in the 1890s and built a sawmill at Chemainus that later became part of the MacMillan Bloedel empire. He lived in Pinehurst only about a decade and moved to a new house in Rockland around the turn of the century.

The Dallas Road mansion was then sold to Dr. George Milne, a Victoria physician who was city medical health officer from 1885 to 1892 and later Liberal MLA for Victoria. He lived in Pinehurst until his death in 1933. Mrs. Milne stayed on another four years.

It went downhill from there. The house remained empty for a time, then was rented out but by 1940 the pressure of a wartime housing shortage saw Pinehurst divided into apartments.

During the war years two lots on Dallas Road were carved off and by war's end it was up for sale for taxes. More property was sold. By 1954 the entrance to Pinehurst and the address were switched to Battery Street at the back.

Today as the West Park apartments, the house is broken up into a dozen suites. The assessed market value of the house is $57,200 while the property is valued at $76,300.

Carole Bergh says Pinehurst illustrates the dilemma of the conservation movement:

What can be done if the owner resists heritage designation and refuses or can't afford to keep his house in good repair?

All over North America there is evidence of a new architectural maxim: Old is good. Businessmen are recycling and renovating buildings.

The annual meeting of Heritage Canada here recently heard that heritage preservation and renovation of old buildings makes economic sense and is going to be the growth industry of the 1980s.

"Carpenter gothic" homes with pounds of gingerbread trim sell at a premium. But not everyone has jumped aboard the heritage bandwagon, or can afford to restore an aging mansion.

The Lees bought Pinehurst in 1956, intending it to be their retirement nest egg.

City council at one time considered heritage designation — which would have prevented any demolition or major alterations to the exterior — but decided against it because of the Lees' opposition.

Lee felt he had already suffered enough in the fight against highrises in James Bay. By the time heritage designation was proposed for his house, the property had already been downzoned twice, lowering its value to prospective purchasers.

Under the original 1956 apartment zoning, a building with 40 suites could have been erected on the site, which is roughly an acre. Today, the owner is limited to a density of 14 housing units.

Bergh wants to save the building through the use of the city's premises maintenance bylaw, a little-known 1974 ordinance.

For example, land must be cleared of debris. Downspouts and eavestroughs must not discharge rain water on to the ground.

Stairs, porches, walls and ceilings must be free of holes or cracks. Worn or torn floor coverings and broken windows must be repaired or replaced.

Although it seems to be a powerful weapon, the bylaw is on questionable legal ground and has never been used. The city had to adopt the bylaw before it could qualify for neighborhood improvement funds under the federal Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program.

There is also section 873 of the Municipal Act, which empowers a property owner to repair or demolish a building that has become a nuisance or danger to public safety. Last month council decided to use it to force the owners of the Beaconville Apartments on Douglas Street to clean up their property.

But such coercive measures have been used only sparingly.

"How far do you go?" asks deputy city planner Peter Crisp

"You'd have to have a battery of inspectors who'd never stop going from house to house."

CRISP SAID the central question now is whether Pinehurst is beyond the point of no return, whether it's justified "to spend that much money on a tired old set of two-by-fours.

"We can't save all of them, much as we'd love to. Nature takes its course with some of these old frame buildings," added Crisp.

The government publication Heritage West calls this "demolition by neglect."

It said recently in an editorial it "is an insidious form of destruction that endangers not only buildings of historic and architectural value, but also many unpretentious structures and neighborhoods which possess a special charm, and restoration potential, unrecognized by those responsible for maintenance and by the municipality concerned."

Two experts on Victoria's heritage buildings think nothing can be done to save Pinehurst from the wreckers. Deterioration and the owners' staunch opposition to heritage designation spell an inevitable fate.

"Its sorry state today will no doubt force its destruction in the near future," say Douglas Franklin and Martin Segger, who is chairman of the city's heritage advisory committee which first recommended Pinehurst for designation, in their recent book on the architecture of Victoria.

That leaves only the court of public opinion.

"It is up to individuals and interested organizations to persuade the authorities and the owner of the property that this house deserves to remain as part of the built environment in James Bay," Bergh said in her report.

"Something must be done if buildings such as this are going to be saved from rotting to the ground."

Just over 10 years ago I first followed the birds over the waves to Vancouver Island.

Vancouver was home to me at the time and it was just a weekend visit out of curiosity more than anything else. Friends had long been telling me how "quaint" it was over here.

Like so many others, I fell in love with Victoria that first weekend and decided it was the place where I would like to raise my children.

But it wasn't the quaintness that first attracted me. It wasn't the Tally Ho wagons or the doubledecker buses. More, it was the pace of life and a park named Beacon Hill.

I remember how we stayed in a motel overlooking the park and, in fact, spent most of that weekend clambering over the rocks with the kids or just strolling beneath the beautiful trees.

From the stark up-and-downness of Vancouver's West End where we had lived, it was a marvellous escape.

What I didn't know at the time, though, was that there were dastardly plans afoot to change the tranquility of it all. Something named the James Bay Land-Use and Transportation Plan called for a major road (an extension of Michigan, actually) to be pushed through Beacon Hill and the Hoo Hoo Club, meaning well I'm sure, offered to build a huge covered picnic area near the playground.

Upset by these prospects, a group of citizens banded together and formed the Beacon Hill Park Association, if not to fight city hall then at least to make known its concerns.

Basically, that first onslaught was successful. Michigan Street stayed where it was and the Hoo Hoos took their whatsit elsewhere.

But that wasn't the end of it as far as park changes were concerned. In fact, alterations started to take place at such an alarming rate that in 1974, the association's founding president Bernice Packford wrote in several aldermanic directions, again expressing concern.

Nothing changed but the changes. There became more of them. City hall's philosophy stayed the same and so in 1976 writer Terry Reksten prepared a brief which, on behalf of the association, was presented to Ald. Ron McKenzie, then city parks committee chairman.

In her brief, Terry pointed out that citizens fighting to prevent changes in the park weren't doing anything new. It had been a Victoria tradition since the park reserve was established in 1858 by Governor James Douglas. The brief ended with a call for a freeze on the so-called improvements.

"We wanted the city to have landscape architects come up with a proper plan of development or to just leave the park alone," Terry told me Tuesday as we strolled through the leaves on Beacon Hill.

Certainly the changes are evident. A new restroom by the tennis courts boasting what Terry calls "gun emplacement architecture," gravelled parking lots concreted over, the large new clubhouse on the cricket field and everywhere those ugly raised flower beds constructed of rocks and topped with concrete.

But what gets me are the hideous iron-pipe protective barriers, designed by some fiendish mind to look more like torture devices, that are meant to stop cars running into trees by the side of the cricket pitch.

Even as we strolled, workers put the finishing touches to the disturbed land that lies behind lots of new concrete curbing and asphalt pathways. This kind of landscaping is distastefully similar to what we see around all the modern apartment blocks. For city folk, Beacon Hill Park is no longer such a marvellous escape.

Terry, once association vice-president, and Bernice, the initiator of it all, have left the scene now. There's a new crew at the helm of the park association, headed by president Garth Mayhew.

Though perhaps discouraged, Terry and Bernice are still concerned and, with civic elections fast approaching, want to know how all aldermanic candidates stand on the issue of their park, of our park. Of whether they believe changes should continue to be made for the sake of change alone or whether what is still left should be left . . . alone.

As Bernice says a little sadly:

"I live near the park and used to go there to walk my dog. But I never go through now. I can't stand to see what they're doing to it!"

Rush is on at Empress to get first phase finished before Christmas festivities

Dining room first in line for spruce-up at Empress

The Empress is undergoing a $5 million renovation program that will involve almost every room in the hotel, manager Ted Balderson said today.

"We will be installing new carpets and improving the bathrooms and sleeping areas of the rooms in a five-year program," he said.

The work is being done in phases to avoid the peak tourist seasons.

Already started is a renovation program in the dining room, including new carpets, drapes, wallpaper and pictures.

The work will be completed quickly to be ready for the Christmas season. Balderson said target date is Nov. 15.

On the basement level, the Charlotte and Albert rooms will be remodelled and a new fire exit installed.

Early in the new year, 64 bedrooms in the old wing will get a facelift. It will also be necessary to replace the 72-year-old plumbing in that section of the hotel.

In spring, work will be done in the lobby in advance of the tea season. Carpets will be replaced, chairs will be upholstered and more plants will be added.

"We also want to feature the fireplaces more, to make the lobby feel more comfortable."

In the fall, there will be renovations in the Bengal Room, the Crystal Ballroom, the Duke of Kent room and the coffee shop. The room themes will not be changed.

In succeeding years, the remaining sleeping rooms will be done, probably in January and February of the year, he said.

"We want to bring in these improvements with as little inconvenience as possible."

Water rate cut

A 25 per cent cut in water rates has been ordered by North Saanich council in one its last acts before the Nov. 17 election.

Ald. James Cumming, a director of the Peninsula Water Commission, said because of surplus revenue the rates are being reduced from $1.20 per thousand gallons to 95 cents.

The reduction is the second in the past year. Earlier the rates were cut from $1.50 per thousand gallons.

Cumming said costs of supplying the service were lower than originally anticipated.

Because of that the Capital Region District was able to drop the price it charges the municipality from 55 cents a thousand gallons to 40 cents, Cumming said.

The municipality took that a step further offering a 10 cent cutback on its own rates.

Cumming said the aim is to have water services operated on a strictly non-profit basis.

As long as the municipality doesn't have surplus revenues, it can qualify for government assisted grants for water services, he said.

The grants provide up to a 75 per cent rebate on debt charges.

"We are taking advantage of that at the present time," Cumming said.

"It just doesn't pay to have surpluses."

Breakers cared more, beat Cougars again

By ERNIE FEDORUK

Having established a record as the only team to defeat Victoria Cougars in Western Hockey League play this season, Seattle Breakers are creeping towards respectability.

"We're getting there," suggested coach Monte Miron after the Breakers did it for a second time, 4-2, Tuesday at Memorial Arena.

"The thing about this team," he continued, "is that we have had only two games that I considered to be bad ones. And against the Cougars, we always play well."

That's part of the truth. The Breakers have been a handful for the Cougars each time they have visited Victoria.

But hockey, like a coin, has its other side.

The other side, as suggested by Victoria coach Jack Shupe, is that the Cougars "weren't ready."

"They (the Cougars) went out as if they could care less about getting revenge for the only game they lost.

"They never checked anybody and never hit anybody. They gave Seattle room to skate, and you just can't do that and expect to win."

There was some validity to the statements of both coaches. Given room to operate like frisky terriers, the ambitious Breakers stung Victoria for three goals in the first period then rode to their second straight victory over the Cougars behind the sparkling netminding of Ken Hodge.

John Strait, a 17-year-old destined to become a valuable cog for Seattle for a possible three seasons, scored two goals and assisted on another by Tom Stanger. John Neeld fired the other as the Breakers cashed in on a sputtering defensive display by Victoria that helped deal goaltender Grant Fuhr his first defeat.

While the Victoria defence could be faulted for opening the door for at least three goals, the offense, with the exception of Barry Pederson, didn't distinguish itself. The attack went off for two periods with inspiration that can best be described as ho-hum, except in the final period when, it turned out, it was too late.

Pederson scored both Victoria goals.

Rookie Daryl Coldwell had a chance to provide another Cougar goal but was foiled by Hodge on a penalty shot that could have been the turning point of the game.

Cougars trailed 3-1 when referee Ken Wheeler awarded the free scoring run after the rookie was hauled down from behind on a breakaway at the 6:52 mark of the second period. Hodge held his ground, forced Coldwell to shoot and then got a toe on the shot.

Instead of finding themselves in a 3-2 game, the Cougars stayed two goals behind and, nine minutes later, went behind 4-1.

Despite the loss, Cougars maintained a four-point hold on first place in the Western Division, because second-place Portland Winter Hawks were dealt a 9-1 beating in Montana by Billings Bighorns.

In other games, Calgary Wranglers defeated New Westminster Bruins 4-1 and Regina Pats beat Brandon Wheat Kings, 5-3.

Only goalies blooded in Coliseum shootout

Times News Services

If Glen Hanlon wasn't worried about the reputation of Minnesota North Stars before Tuesday night's National Hockey League game, he now is.

Hanlon saw his once-impressive 2.73 goals-against average go down the drain during a goaltenders' nightmare which ended in a 7-7 tie between Hanlon's Vancouver Canucks and the North Stars at Vancouver's Pacific Coliseum.

"The dam sure broke tonight and I was a little shaky," said Hanlon. "I'm glad they didn't get that last shot on goal — we might have lost."

Hanlon made just 19 saves during a night of bizarre goals at both ends of the ice. Netminder Gary Edwards of the North Stars didn't fare much better in stopping 26 shots.

Vancouver needed a spectacular goal by Ron Sedlbauer, his second of the game, at 12:10 to the last period to gain the tie, the Canucks' third tie in their six-game homestand.

Meanwhile, in Atlanta, it might have been a scene right out of the Keystone Kops.

Players milled about on the floor of the arena. An embattled leader doffed his garments, removed his teeth and attempted to scale a glass barrier. It had all the ingredients of a comedy caper.

The incident in the game between the Flames and Winnipeg jets took place midway through the third period and resulted in expulsion of nine persons — four players from each team and Winnipeg coach Tom McVie.

It was McVie who removed his coat, tie and teeth and attempted to scale the glass partition between the players' benches to get at Atlanta coach Al MacNeil during the bench-clearing brawl.

He was restrained by arena officials, much the way the Flames had restrained Winnipeg shooters earlier in the game en route to an 8-0 Atlanta victory.

All the scoring was completed before the hostilities got started at the 11:15 mark. Some 153 minutes in penalties were assessed — 72 to Atlanta — during the 25-minute stoppage.

Veteran centre Eric Vail scored twice, giving him a career total of 155 and a place in the Atlanta record books as the top scorer in franchise's history. The old mark was held by Tom Lysiak, traded away to Chicago last year.

Elsewhere, Hartford Whalers continued to show Howe while routing Colorado Rockies 7-2 and New York Islanders got three goals from three different shooters in a span of less than 3½ minutes to beat Los Angeles Kings 4-1.

The Atlanta-Winnipeg game game had the earmarks of a donnybrook earlier in the third period when six players were sent off with fighting penalties. Two of those combatants, Atlanta's Phil Russell and Dave Hoyda of the Jets, chronicled the main event as their major penalties expired.

Kent Nilsson, a mainstay of the Jets for two years in the defunct World Hockey Association before joining the Flames this year, also scored two goals as did Ivan Boldirev.

Mark Howe scored once for Hartford. His 51-year-old father, Gordie, added his sixth of the year. Gordie's goal came during a four-goal Hartford blitz in the second period and Colorado never recovered.

And while Whalers coach Don Blackburn admitted his charges were getting more confidence each time out, Rockies coach Don Cherry was showing his frustrations.

He chased into the stands after a heckler and had to be restrained by an arena attendant.

Dave Langevin, Bryan Trottier and John Tonelli made swift work of the Kings in the opening period and the New Yorkers never did let the visitors get started.

"Mistakes by us gave them their first three goals," said Los Angeles veteran Marcel Dionne, who moved into the league's goal-scoring lead with the Kings' only goal — his 15th of the year.

Bruins get one of three

CALGARY — Western Hockey League exectuve director Dave Descent announced Tuesday that only one of three game postponments requested by New Westminster Bruins will be allowed.

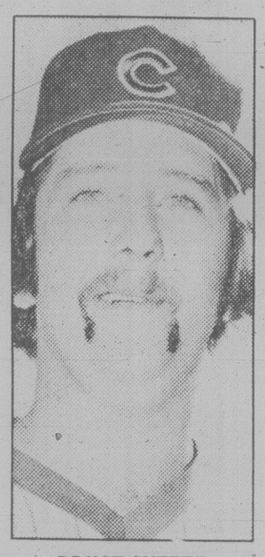
Victoria Cougars will not play the Bruins on Friday in New Westminster. The game has been put off to Feb. 7.

New Westminster, playing without five players suspended until Dec. 1 by a provincial court judge following a trial over assault charges, had been trying to switch three games until later in the season.

Cougars agreed to the move but Seattle Breakers, scheduled to play in New Westminster on Sunday and on Nov. 17, refused.

"Both teams must agree to any change of dates — it has been done with three games already this season — and Seattle has chosen to play the games as scheduled," said Descent.

Sutter edges Niekro for Cy Young award



BRUCE SUTTER
. . . .close to save record

NEW YORK (AP) — Chicago Cubs reliever Bruce Sutter, who tied the National League record for saves with 37 last season, today was named winner of the NL Cy Young Award for 1979.

Sutter, who came within one save of the major league baseball's record set by Toronto-native John Hiller of Detroit Tigers in 1973, narrowly defeated 21-game winner Joe Niekro of Houston Astros in voting to name the league's top pitcher.

The fork-balling right-hander earned 10 of the 24 first-place ballots to become the second NL reliever and the third in baseball history to win the prize. Mike Marshall won it for Los Angeles Dodgers in 1974 and Sparky Lyle of New York Yankees took the American League honor in 1977.

Sutter also received six second-place votes and four third-place votes for a total of 72 points, with five points awarded for first-place mention, three points for second and one for third.

Niekro was second with 66 points. Strikeout champion J. R. Richard of Houston Astros was third with 41 points, followed by Tom Seaver of Cincinnati Reds (20 points), Pittsburgh Pirates reliever Kent Tekulve (14 points).

Sutter appeared in 62 games for Chicago, compiling a 6-6 record and a 2.23 earned-run average in 101 innings. He struck out 110 batters and walked only 32.

Joe Niekro earned nine first-place votes.

Oakland sale high on owners' agenda

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The possible sale of Oakland A's to a Denver oilman and forthcoming negotiations with the players' union were scheduled to be major topics of discussion today in a meeting of major league baseball owners.

A spokesman said all major league clubs would be represented. American League owners were scheduled to meet seperately to discuss the possibility of the sale of the Oakland franchise, which drew only about 300,000 fans last season, to Denver oilman Marvin Davis.

But American League president Lee MacPhail indicated no immediate action was likely.

"It could be weeks, it could be months or nothing may happen," MacPhail said. "Nothing is going to happen at this meeting. We are just going to update the clubs on what the situation is at this time."

The A's have eight years remaining on a lease with the Oakland Coliseum, apparently the only problem blocking the sale.

The Associated Press learned earlier that a sale was in the works that could bring major league baseball to Denver for the 1980 season.

"We've been working at this for three years," MacPhail said. "So I can't tell you it is going to fall in place at this time. We are having a player relations meeting and, because all of our people will be together, we decided to review the Oakland situation.

"There are two big pieces that have to come together," MacPhail said, adding that one is A's owner Charles O. Finley and the other is the Oakland Coliseum Board.

"We do not have an agreement with the Coliseum Board," he said.

Always a chance

By Associated Press

Milwaukee led Philadelphia by four points with 16 seconds to play, but Brian Winters wasn't fooled.

"That means nothing in this league," said the Bucks' all-star guard. "Twenty points can sometimes mean nothing."

The '76ers wiped out Milwaukee's margin on baskets by Julius Erving and Doug Collins, then went on to beat the Bucks 118-117 in overtime Tuesday night in a matchup of National Basketball Association division leaders.

"You know there is always a chance," said Collins. "In pro ball the clock stops after each basket and you get the ball at halfcourt on a timeout. You never give up."

In other NBA games, Seattle SuperSonics beat Chicago Bulls 114-97, Cleveland Cavaliers outscored Indiana Pacers 134-117, Phoenix Suns topped Utah Jazz 120-107, Atlanta Hawks edged New York Knicks 98-96, San Antonio Spurs beat New Jersey Nets 108-95 and Los Angeles Lakers defeated San Diego Clippers 127-112.

Erving scored Philadelphia's final seven points in overtime, to offset a pair of desperation three-point field goals by Winters. Erving finished with a game-high 34 points for Philadelphia, which leads the Atlantic Division with a 10-2 record. Milwaukee remains atop the Midwest at 10-3.

Injury worries Gotta

CALGARY (CP) — A neck injury to quarterback John Hufnagel of Calgary Stampeders has coach Jack Gotta somewhat concerned as the Canadian Football League team prepares for Saturday's Western Conference semi-final against the British Columbia Lions in Calgary.

"When you're dealing with an injury in the neck area, it can become complicated," said Gotta.

Hufnagel suffered a pinched nerve in the first quarter of Sunday's 41-8 win over Saskatchewan Roughriders and was replaced in the second quarter by Ken Johnson, who has been sharing starting duties with Hufnagel this season.

Johnson directed the team's most successful offensive attack of the season Sunday, throwing four touchdown passes and completing 14 of 20 attempts for 305 yards.

An elbow injury to outside linebacker Bernie Morrison, however, appears to be the most serious among the Stampeders.

Borg's net profit from tennis calculated to be $7.3 million

STOCKHOLM (AP) — A Swedish newspaper estimates Bjorn Borg's net profit from eight years of international tennis at about $7.3 million.

Dagens Nyheter predicts in a full page economic article that the 23-year-old Swedish superstar will add another $23 million to his capital in prize money and endorsements earnings in the next 20 years.

Dagens Nyheter economic reporter Sven-Ivan Sundqvist bases his estimate of Borg's current fortune on earnings from tournaments, exhibitions, advertising and yield since 1972.

He allows for 30-per-cent taxation, a calculation based on average taxation in various countries, and also deducts Borg's estimated cost of living and estimated fees to his agent, International Management Group.

This would leave the four-time Wimbledon champion with total savings of about $7.3 million by the end of this year, Sundqvist says.

"But this is just the beginning," he writes. "Today, Borg's name is an asset which can be exploited throughout this century."

He estimates Borg's tennis earnings at $47,000 in 1972, the year the youngster chose tennis over school.

Borg, who moved from highly-taxed Sweden to Monaco a few years ago, always refuses to discuss his income.

Zorn keeps a level head despite roller coaster ride

SEATTLE (AP) — In his fourth season as a National Football League quarterback, Jim Zorn is discovering the ups and downs of his sport.

Seattle Seahawks' lefthander may have had his hot and cold days in his first three seasons, but this has really been a roller coaster year.

In the Seahawks' season opener against San Diego Chargers, he was intercepted three times and he lost two fumbles as Seattle lost 33-16.

In Seattle's third game, a 27-10 victory over Oakland Raiders, he completed 13 of 22 passes for a career high 277 yards and three touchdowns.

Three weeks ago, in a 34-14 triumph over Houston Oilers, he set a club record by completing 78 per cent of his passes — 18 of 23 passes for 252 yards and three TDs.

On Sunday, Zorn and the Seahawks were embarrassed by Los Angeles Rams 24-0. Their total yardage was minus seven yards, an NFL record for futility. The Seattle quarterback was 2 for 17 for 25 yards.

"I'm not going to forget about that game," he promised.

His statistics aren't that far off his statistics of last season when he led the American Football Conference in passing yards.

This season he has completed 154 of 294 passes — 52 per cent — for 1,882 yards and nine touchdowns and has been intercepted 12 times.

Zorn isn't sure if the quarterback should get the blame for a team's defeat or a team's victory. But he also knows that's part of the game.

"I know that and I accept it because that's the way it is," he said. "But I don't know how fair it is."

The Kingdome crowd of 62,048 booed Sunday. Like it or not, the Seahawks are finding out that Seattle is growing up as an NFL city. Flushed with the suecess of last season, the Seahawk fans are showing their displeasure with their team's results this season.

The Seahawks were 9-7 last season but stand only 4-6 this year and prospects of making the NFL playoffs appear dim.

From the opening day of the Seahawks' training camp at Cheney, Wash., Zorn refused to make any playoff predictions.

Ten games into the regular season, it appears that he made a wise decision.

"I'm disappointed," he said, "because we don't have a better record."

Even in the euphoria of an important victory, the 6-foot-2, 200-pounder has learned to keep a lid on his emotions.

"You don't want to be a fool the following week," he explained. "You want to go into the following week with a level head. You don't want to say something that you would regret later on.

"For example, after the Houston game if I said I'm going to be great for the rest of the season and we are invincible now, I'd be a fool for saying that."

. . . up one day, down next

Zorn wasn't supposed to make it in professional football at all. He made the NFL as a free agent out of little Cal Poly-Pomona.

"As far as maturity goes now," he said, "I know more than I ever have in the past. The problem comes when I do know a situation but don't respond to it properly.

"Football is a real challenge for me and I love challenges. I love my job. I might not have the ability to be the best quarterback in the National Football League or in the American Football Conference or whatever but I want to be the best I can. I'm in a challenge with myself."

Winterizing your RV aids life expectancy

stewart lang

If you aren't one of the growing number of recreational vehicle owners who stay mobile throughout the year, you'll soon be facing the task of winterizing and storing your home away from home until the spring.

It's a relatively simple procedure and most of the steps are common to all types of RVs.

First of all, open all windows a crack to equalize inside and outside temperatures and promote air circulation.

This step helps curb condensation and subsequent mildew.

Remove all clothing, bedding, medicines and foodstuffs and store in the house. Then clean the inside of the vehicle thoroughly, paying particular attention to stove and refrigerator (or ice box). Both the area under the burners and oven should be cleaned on the stove and the refrigerator should be wiped out with a solution of baking soda and water. Leave the fridge door ajar to prevent a buildup of odors.

It's a good idea, too, to prop up all cushions and mattresses to allow better air circulation.

Holding tanks should be drained, flushed and drained again.

Then there's the water system.

Open all drain valves and taps, including the hot water heater and toilet. If possible, blow air (low pressure) through the system to remove water from the low points.

Now you're ready to install the special non-toxic RV anti-freeze.

Put a bypass around the hot water system to save using up a lot of extra anti-freeze, set aside one cup of the fluid for each drain and pour the rest into your water tank.

Turn on each tap (or operate the pump) until the anti-freeze appears. Do the same with the toilet and the shower and then put a cupful down each drain to keep the traps from freezing.

Ice and snow can be hard on the caulking compound sealing the roof, so a large tarp spread over the roof and tied down carefully on all four corners can prevent a lot of problems. Make sure you prop the tarp up around the door to provide access.

Perhaps the best solution to a lot of the problems caused by winter is to maintain heat in the unit. I found this to be especially true in the damp climate of the coast.

Keep the cupboards, drawers, closet doors and access points to the water system open and the cushions propped up — just the same as if you were preparing it for storage without heat.

Some people use a light bulb as a heat source, but I prefer to rig a small electric heater into a timing system.

This setup heats the rig a little more efficiently and the timer can be set so the heater comes on only at certain intervals through the day and night.

It might cost a little more than running a light bulb or storing the rig without heat, but the investment in an RV these days makes any measure intended to extend its lifetime relatively cheap.

NIBBLES: The Amalgamated Conservation Society is objecting to the $10 sport salmon fishing licence suggested by Sol Sinclair's report to federal fisheries.

They do support a licence of $5, providing funds additional to the administration cost are applied to the salmonid enhancement program.

A letter sent to Wally Johnson, director general of federal fisheries for the Pacific Coast, outlines their opposition to "tags, punch-cards and/or annual limits (additional to that controlled by the daily limit of four fish".

It also states:

"Nor will we accept a reduction in the daily limit of four (4) fish per day."

Curlers make cashspiel bids

Thirty-seven rinks, 16 from out of town, have entered the qualifying men's bonspiel this weekend at Playland Curling for the V190-New Dominion Hotel Curling Classic to be held at Playland at the end of the month.

Four places will be open from this weekend's event into the $25,000 cashspiel with the finalists in "A" and "B" events receiving $250 towards their $500 entry fee in the Nov. 29-Dec. 2 classic.

In addition to the better city representatives, the qualifying event has drawn visiting rinks skipped by such well-known curlers as Trev Fisher of New Westminster, Gary Hendrickson of Squamish, John Munroe of Abbotsford, Jack Finbogason and Wayne Matthewson of Vancouver, Chuck Perry and Pat Horning of Comox and Steve Williams of Duncan.

Rinks will play a two-event, double-knockout competition.

Draws are set for Saturday at 9 a.m. and 2, 5 and 8 p.m., Sunday at 8 and 11 a.m. and 2 and 7 p.m. and Monday at 8 and 11.30 a.m. ("A") finals and 3 p.m. ("B" finals).

At Duncan, the annual Duncan women's bonspiel starts Thursday at 6 p.m.

And, beginning Monday, the Esquimalt Men's Bonspiel will commence with a special prize of $1,000 for the first eight-ender. Entries may be made by contacting the Esquimalt Sports Centre, 382-3261.

In the men's Harley Davidson Series of Curling at the Racquet Club Tuesday, the Steve Skillings rink won its sixth straight game with an 8-2 decision over Al Frame (2-4).

In other games, Bruce Coulter (4-2) defeated Don Matheson (4-2) 8-5, Brad Clarke (3-3) downed Tim Horrigan (3-3) 9-3, Barry Harvey (2-4) edged Bob Hawkes (2-4) 6-5, and Barry Moore (2-4) defeated Bill Morris (1-5) 8-6.

NHL's 22nd club in Meadowlands

TORONTO (CP) — The National Hockey League will take the first step next month to add a 22nd team for the 1980-81 season by expanding to the Meadowlands' sports facility in East Rutherford, N.J., NHL president John Ziegler said Tuesday.

Ziegler said a committee will be formed in December to conduct a feasibility study into placing a franchise at the Meadowlands and a report on the committee's findings will be submitted to the league governors during the all-star break in February.

Ziegler said previous studies "indicate a healthy and viable franchise can succeed at the Meadowlands." He said a definite decision will be made at the annual meetings in June.

He admitted there were a number of obstacles impeding talks with prospective owners, not the least of which would be indemnity fees to three clubs already operating within 125 kilometres of the new arena — New York Rangers, New York Islanders and Philadelphia Flyers.

"Many things have yet to be decided, the biggest thing being the television definition as it relates to the territorial rights and a potential overlap of the three markets," Ziegler said.

The New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority, owner of the Meadowlands, is building a 20,000-seat arena with an expected completion date of spring, 1981.

The NHL president refused to confirm that as many as six groups have expressed interest in owning the Meadowlands franchise, which will cost considerably more than the $6 million it cost other groups to join the NHL in recent expansions.

Arthur Imperatore, a New Jersey trucking executive who owns Colorado Rockies, is said to be one of the applicants.

Ziegler said the support given the Meadowlands facility by other sports franchises is a definite bartering point for the new owners. He noted there are 22 million people "in the immediate area . . . but we must be very careful not to cause any damage to the other franchises in the area."

The Flyers are on record as opposing expansion into New Jersey. And the Rangers will be holding out for a multi-million dollar indemnification settlement to allow a new club into the Meadowlands, just 25 kilometres from Madison Squard Garden, because, as one New York executive observed: "New York is the centre of the universe. Everyone knows what's good for New York is right for the rest of North America."

Island meet starts

Mt. Douglas and Belmont will stage the Lower Island "AA" high school volleyball championships today and Friday.

In the girls' tourney, league-champion and host Mt. Douglas will be joined by Spectrum, Esquimalt, Oak Bay, Victoria and Belmont. Action starts at 3 p.m. each day.

The boys' tourney, which starts at 4 each day at Belmont, the host club will be competing with Oak Bay, Esquimalt, Victoria, Reynolds and league-champion Mt. Douglas.

Mt. Douglas also captured the Victoria City high school girls' "B" title Monday with a 15-13, 16-14 decision over host Esquimalt.

Other teams in the tournament were Dunsmuir, St. Margaret's I, St. Margaret's II and Spectrum.

Greenwood agrees to longer contract

LONDON (Reuter) — Ron Greenwood will be England's manager until after the 1982 World Cup soccer tournament in Spain, the English Football Association has announced.

Greenwood, who was originally signed until July next year, has agreed to a contract for an extra two years.

Since he took control of the team in August, 1977, England's record in 21 matches is 14 wins, five draws and two defeats.

England's progress under Greenwood was expected to continue in the European championship against Bulgaria at Wembley later this month. England needs one more point from the last two games to reach the 1980 finals in Italy.

U.S. golfers win

YOKAHOMA, Japan (AP) — A women's professional golf team representing the United States, with Amy Alcott leading the way, beat a Japanese team by 11 strokes today in a $100,000, 36-hole dual match.

The eight U.S. representatives shot a total of 574 strokes, 11-under-par, for a two-round total of 39-under-par 1,145 against a 28-under-par 1,156 for the Japanese.

The winners earned $8,000.

Yuko Moriguchi of Japan fired a course record seven-under-par 67 for a 137 total to win the $20,000 individual first prize by two strokes.

Moriguchi, who started the final round one stroke behind the first round leaders — Alcott, Donna Caponi Young of the U.S. and Tatsuko Ohsako of Japan — registered seven birdies and no bogeys on the 5,724-metre, par-74 Yokahoma Country Club course.

Alcott shot a 70 for a nine-under-par 139 total and placed second. She received $13,000.

Beth Daniel of the U.S. had a five-under-par 69 for a 142 total and shared third pace with Pat Bradley of the U.S., Sandra Post, formerly of Oakville, Ont., and Hisako Higuchi, Japan's No. 1 pro. Bradley and Post shot 71s while Higuchi fired a 69.

India wraps up victory

BOMBAY, India (Reuter) — India completed its first victory over Australia in a cricket test series when it took the sixth and final test Wednesday by an innings and 100 runs to take the series 2-0.

Australia, dismissed for 160 in its first innings in reply to India's 458 for eight declared, fell for 198 in its second innings.

The last five wickets crashed in slightly more than an hour and India won with a day to spare. It was India's first win by an innings over Australia in 36 tests.

Medium-fast bowler Kapil Dev took four wickets for 39 runs and left-arm spinner Dilip Doshi had three for 60.

To add to Australia's misfortunes, Rick Darling was hit on the head by the ball when hooking Dev. He collapsed and was taken to hospital for x-rays.

Gordon Head collects crown

Gordon Head chalked up 363 points under the reverse-scoring system to capture team laurels at the Greater Victoria elementary school cross-country championship meet Monday.

Braefoot placed second with 406, Lakehill was third at 483 and Blanshard fourth at 499.

Gordon Head also won the 12-year-old boys' team category while Braefoot topped girls in the 12-year-old, eight and nine-year-old classes.

Monterey won the 10 and 11-year-old girls' competition, Braefoot collected the corresponding boys' title and Fairburn won the eight and nine-year-old girls' division.

A total of 758 runners from 25 schools took part in the competition.

Individual results:

CP Air goes above and beyond the call of business.

CP Air is the first one up from Vancouver to Toronto.

We offer you the first nonstop from Vancouver at 9:00 a.m. daily.
Plus the first evening nonstop return at 6:45 p.m.
Convenient connections from Victoria.

If you're like most business people who fly with us, we know that endless meetings, hectic schedules, and long days come with the territory.

And you need all the help you can get.

Which is precisely why we offer you the first breakfast nonstop from Vancouver to Toronto daily.

That way, you arrive early enough to settle into your hotel, relax over dinner, and still have time to consider the following day's business.

You see, we want you to fly with us. And we're out to give you more than just a ride from here to there.

That's why we offer you our renowned silver service. Imaginative cuisine, fresh coffee and tea, and a choice of wines and liqueurs imported from Europe.

And because we know your travel plans require maximum flexibility, we offer you more flights with more convenient departures and returns, and more time-saving nonstops than ever before.

What's more, we have more people whose special responsibility is to keep an eye out for you at check-in in Vancouver and to help in any way possible.

Come on along.

And we'll show you first hand how we treat a very important client.

Daily afternoon 747 SuperOrange.
Busy morning? Then catch our afternoon 747 luncheon nonstop at 1:30 p.m. (Arrives 8:40 p.m.)

Fight against stimulants

BERLIN (AFP) — Arthur Gold, president of the European Athletics Association has called for an organized and systematic fight against the use of illegal stimulants among athletes.

The British head of the EAA announced that this fight would be co-ordinated by a three-man working committee and that findings would be submitted to the next full meeting of the International Amateur Athletics Federation.

Blues won't appeal

TORONTO (CP) — A University of Toronto athletics spokesman said Tuesday the university will not appeal its disqualification as Ontario Universities Athletic Association soccer champion.

Laurentian University Voyageurs of Sudbury, Ont., lost to the Blues 3-2 in the OUAA final Saturday, but Voyageurs coach Greg Zorbas successfully protested that first-year Blues forward Mike Ristich had played pro soccer with First Portuguese of the National Soccer League.

"Investigation by my office and by coach Bob Nicol has disclosed that Mike Ristich inadvertantly signed a non-amateur card or contract in order to play with First Portuguese during the summer," David Copp, co-ordinator of excellence in Toronto's athletics department, said in a news release.

"After checking with Eric King of the Canadian Soccer Association's head office in Ottawa, we have learned that Mike's registration card clearly lists him as a non-amateur and we have no choice but to accept this situation. Thus, we will not appeal the Laurentian protest."

As a result of the proceedings, Laurentian will replace Toronto as the OUAA representative at the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union's championship tournament, which starts Thursday in Edmonton.

All Blacks stretch Scottish rugby mark

GLASGOW (Reuter) — The New Zealand All Blacks, who have never lost a rugby match in Scotland in 74 years, preserved that record Tuesday by defeating Glasgow 12-6 for their fifth win in as many matches during their current British tour.

The All Blacks, who led 8-0 at halftime, scored three tries through winger Brian Ford, who crossed the Glasgow line twice, and fullback Allan Hewson. Fly half Bryan Gossman kicked two penalties for the home team.

The New Zealanders have five more games in Britain, including Saturday's international with Scotland at Edinburgh and an international against England at Twickenham on Nov. 24.

RED GRANGE, the "Galloping Ghost" of college football, carries ball for 95-yard gain and touchdown for Illinois in 1924 game against Michigan.

It was football feat to stay alive in pro days of Galloping Ghost

By BRUCE LOWITT

NEW YORK (AP) — He's not galloping much these days, and the way the game was played back when he was a kid, it's amazing Red Grange and his colleagues ran very far or very long.

But they did because there was no other way to play pro football back in the 1920s, roughly two decades before free substitution allowed the shuttling of players on and off the field.

"Eighteen men on the rosters then, not the 40 or so of today," says Grange, the Galloping Ghost who made the United States sit up and take notice of this violent game when he signed with Chicago Bears in 1925 after gaining fame through his brilliant touchdown runs for the University of Illinois.

"We played offence and defence. Until the free-substitution rule came in, you got carried out only if you got killed. To leave a game any other way, any other time, was an insult to a player."

No. 77, a charter member of the Pro Football Hall of Fame, is 76 now, relaxing at his home in Lake Wales, Fla., about 75 miles from Tampa. He's been out of pro football since 1934.

What does he do now?

"Nothing," he said, "unless you count mowing the lawn, fishing, golf. I've put in my time, been all over, seen what I wanted to. To me, travelling was the hardest work in the world."

In fact, Grange says, he's delighted to be left alone. He doesn't seek out the limelight that attracts so many former athletes whose skills have faded but whose egos remain inflated.

"A lot of people need a lot of people around them," Grange said. "I don't. I'm tickled to death to do absolutely nothing now."

Recently he wrote the forward to The Chicago Bears; An Illustrated History. It's one of those coffee-table books, with enough photographs to bring on rushes of memories for fans of that era and moments of amazement for today's young fans, kids who'll wonder how in the world they ever stayed alive back then.

Grange was there before a lot of the things we take for granted.

Like hashmarks and forward passes from anywhere behind the line.

"If you ran out of bounds back then, they put the ball in play a yard from the sideline. Then they spent the rest of day shoving you out of bounds.

"Oh, and I remember the '32 playoff against the (Portsmouth, Ohio) Spartans. Oh, how they yelled when I caught that pass!"

It was indoors, at Chicago Stadium, on an 80-yard field, because the city was blizzard-bound. In the fourth quarter of the scoreless game, the first NFL playoff ever, Bronko Nagurski took a handoff on a fourth-and-goal at the two, then suddenly back-pedalled and lobbed a pass to the unguarded Grange in the end zone.

Spartan coach Potsy Clark shrieked that it had been an illegal pass, that Nagurski had been within five yards of the line when he threw the ball. But, then as now, it was a judgment call with no instant replay. The TD stood and the Bears won 9-0.

"There have been a few other changes since then," Grange understated. "We used to have three coaches — head, backfield and line. Now there's seven or eight.

"And the equipment. We wore leather, canvas, felt, wool. Weighed about three times as much as the plastic and nylon they've got now. Everybody's better protected, 'cept of course these helmets today are lethal weapons," he says.

"Protection. Everyone's making such a big thing about it today. I must've gotten slugged a thousand times when I was playing and I was hurt but three times. Caught my cleat once in the mud in Wrigley Field and someone fell over my knee. And a couple of times I put my shoulder out of its socket."

Grange doesn't buy the NFL's attempts to protect the quarterbacks with quick whistles.

"Heck, it's the blockers' job to protect him, not the refs'," he said. "If they don't know how to do it by the time they get into the NFL, well, maybe finding their quarterback on the ground should be the penalty. Maybe then they'd learn how to block a little better."

If it sounds like Grange is longing for the good old days and demeaning today's players, forget it.

"Today's are much better, in almost every way," he said.

KEN NORTON...works to help abused children

Fighting over, Norton covets gentler things

By WILL GRIMSLEY

NEW YORK (AP) — The man who broke Muhammad Ali's jaw and in the opinion of many ringsiders scored three victories over the greatest fighter of the age can't stand to see a small child cry.

"I have seen them with their noses broken, their eyes blacked and their little bodies bruised all over," says Ken Norton. "I've seen them after they've been tossed out of three-story windows and dumped into a scalding bathtub.

"Abused and molested kids are the greatest tragedy of our time."

The 6-foot-3, 220-pound Norton, one of the most superb physical specimens the game has produced, has hung up his gloves and turned his attention to gentler and more charitable pursuits.

The handsome, chiseled features that have been subjected to the most destructive fists of the generation are being preserved for exposure to the Hollywood and television screens. The energies long devoted to ring violence are being diverted to the discouragement of parental abuse of children.

"I never want to fight again," Norton said en route to a broadcasting assignment in Scotland. "I want to build a new life for myself in acting and broadcasting. I want to spend my spare time helping kids beaten up by parents and hung up on drugs."

Norton grew up in Jacksonville, Ill., and learned to fight in the marines. He had his first pro fight in 1968, but success came slowly. He wound up as a sparring partner, at one time the hired punching bag of Smokin' Joe Frazier.

Under the aegis of the late Bob Biron, a quiet and gentlemanly man, his fortunes turned for the better.

The world became aware of him on March 31, 1973, when he fractured Ali's jaw and scored a 12-round upset in a non-title bout. He fought Ali again in September of the same year and on Sept. 28, 1976 — brutal brawls he lost, but which many experts scored for Norton.

It was the latter fight in Yankee Stadium, when he came so close to the undisputed world heavyweight crown, that drained Norton of all of his spirit.

"I never had a good fight after that," he said. "I felt a knot in the pit of my stomach. I felt stripped of everything I ever owned. From that point on, I went steadily downhill."

In 1977, he knocked out Olympian Duane Bobick and Lorenzo Zanon twice and on Nov. 5 beat Jimmy Young for the WBC portion of the heavyweight title, which he lost eight months later in a 15-round decision to Larry Holmes. His decision to retire came after Earnie Shavers knocked him out in the first round last March.

Shed no tears for Ken Norton. As a fighter, he made around $10 million, exceeded only by Ali and Frazier, and handled it discreetly. Today he is a multi-millionaire, owner of apartment houses and industrial complexes in the Los Angeles area.

"When I was collecting good purses," he said. "I followed a fixed formula — bank half of it and blow the other half."

He has a fetish for fancy jewelry. Gold chains hang around his neck and his fingers glisten with rings, some diamonds almost as big as marbles.

Already he has starred in two motion pictures, Mandingo and Drum and has two in the works. He is a commentator for NBC-TV, assigned to the Olympic Games in Moscow. He is taking lessons in acting and elocution.

His heart, however, is with kids. He is deeply involved in Bronco Junction, a charity for asthmatic, battered and abused children.

"It tears your heart out to look at some of them," he says. "I don't understand how parents can be so cruel. It's all right to bang a man in the ring — they're two equals — but hit a kid? It's sickening."

When westerns ruled on TV

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — The emergence of Pernell Roberts in the new Trapper John, M.D. series and annoucement that Young Maverick will soon make its debut stirs memories of a time when westerns ruled the TV roost.

Roberts was the guy who quit Bonanza a few years after it began a 14-year run. Maverick was one of the most popular horse operas of its day.

But there are more than a score of oaters that have all but been forgotten. Few are seen in reruns, possibly because the simplistic plots and sexless stories are too unsophisticated for today's tastes.

Studio back lots are strewn with the bones of men who once sat tall in the saddle. A few western actors managed to go on to bigger and better things. Others were simply dry gulched.

Gunsmoke! — which ran for 20 years — made Jim Arness a multimillionaire who dabbles in TV occasionally. Milburn Stone (Doc Adams) is semi-retired. Dennis Weaver (Chester) stars in TV movies. Amanda (Kitty) Blake is retired and lives in Arizona.

Bonanza's Lorne (Ben Cartwright) Greene hosts a TV nature show. Michael (Little Joe) Landon produces and stars in Little House On The Prairie. David Canary has disappeared from the screen and the aforementioned Roberts (Adam Cartwright) is playing a doctor now.

Some of the early TV western stars went on to major movie-TV stardom — Clint Eastwood (Rawhide), Steve McQueen (Wanted: Dead or Alive), Burt Reynolds (Riverboat and Gunsmoke) are superstars.

Jim Garner (Maverick) is the star of The Rockford Files and Roger Moore is the new James Bond.

A few of the actors who rode the old west are now deceased, including Dan Blocker (Bonanza), Nick Adams (The Rebel), Eric Fleming (Rawhide), Ward Bond (Wagon Train), and Richard Long (The Big Valley).

Director raps Canadian film

MONTREAL (CP) — Canada's film industry may seem to be booming, but mismanagement and bad movies are making it an embarrassing international joke, says expatriate director Steven Stern.

"Sour grapes," replies producer Ronald Cohen, who says the Canadian industry is producing respected films and is also beginning to have a real impact on the market.

Both men worked together recently on the heavily-promoted new film Running starring Michael Douglas and Susan Anspach. Stern was writer-director on the $6.3-million movie and Cohen was co-producer with Robert Cooper, the former Ombudsan on CBC-TV.

And although Stern said in an interview here that he had enjoyed making Running and expected it to be a box-office success, he has some harsh words for the Canadian film industry, its producers and the federal Canadian Film Development Corporation.

"The fact that Canada is producing 50 feature films a year isn't something to be proud of," said the boyish-looking native of Timmins Ont. "Because of the quality of most of these films, it's dangerous.

Stern said that because of Canadian tax laws designed to develop a film industry here, movie-making in Canada has become a financial exercise where the quality of the product has become irrelevant.

"Through all my conversations with people, I've come to realize that Canadian producers are concerned more with 'making the deal' than selling the picture.

Stern, who started his film career writing and directing for Canadian television and moved to Hollywood in 1967, said "things are going on here that you'll find nowhere else in the world — and they aren't good. "This is the only place I know where the producers of a film are paying themselves bigger salaries than they pay the directors they hire."

"You have producers in Canada who have no track record of success, paying themselves salaries two or three times higher than Michael Douglas got when he produced One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest or The China Syndrome.

"My salary for this picture, which involves at least a year's work, is $75,000 — the same as I can get for directing a TV movie that takes up six weeks' time.

"But (Running producers Robert Cooper and Ronald Cohen) are receiving a salary of $250,000. That's an incredibly weird set of priorities."

Montrealer Cohen, a lawyer and vice-president of the Canadian Association of Movie Producers, who produced one movie before Running, suggested that Stern is "swinging a wide stick" because of his own personal disappointment that a planned project had fallen through.

Before the judge

A 30-year-old Nanaimo man was sentenced to nine months in jail in Victoria provincial court Tuesday for auto theft.

Terrence Joseph Hillier had pleaded guilty Oct. 19.

Crown counsel Don Laughton told Judge Harold Alder city police on Oct. 14 spotted a car on Finlayson near Douglas making a 360-degree turn and stopped the vehicle on Douglas near Burnside.

Hillier, who was the driver, admitted stealing the vehicle about an hour and a half earlier in Nanaimo and said he was going to kill himself by driving it into a wall.

Owner Harold Mark Peacock told police the vehicle was stolen from the Civic Arena after he gave Hillier the keys to the car to get some hockey equipment.

Laughton noted a previous conviction July 27 this year in Richmond for possession of stolen property and theft under $200 for which Hillier was placed on two years probation. Laughton said Hillier had been described as totally unsatisfactory in reporting as directed under the probation order.

Defence lawyer Dwight Whitson said it was a silly, stupid act of desperation caused by despondency and hopelessness.

He said Hillier, who is functionally illiterate, was in the province searching for his sister.

Alder imposed the nine month sentence, placed Hillier on another two-year probation and said he hopes Hillier can serve his time in a forestry camp setting or where he could improve his life skills or education.

Shoplifting an $11.99 Backgammon set resulted in an extra month in jail for 20-year-old Daniel Mallette of 760 Queens.

Laughton told the court Mallette, who pleaded guilty, and a female companion went into The Bay, 1701 Douglas, on Oct. 18 and Mallette took the game from his companion and walked out of the store without paying for it. He was arrested at the Imperial Inn.

Laughton asked Alder to note that Mallette was convicted only nine days prior to the incident in Vancouver for possession of stolen property and was given a suspended sentence and placed on two year's probation.

A Wilkinson Road inmate had another month tacked on a sentence he is serving in default of paying a $1,000 fine.

John Wayne Pritchard, who pleaded guilty to breach of probation, was fined that amount March 21 this year in Vancouver for possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking but was serving the two-month default time instead.

Court was informed Pritchard was ordered to report to his probation officer as directed and failed to do so Sept. 7.

Profs dance for UVic folly

Professors will dance, deans will sing and a cast of hundreds will satirize academic life in the University of Victoria's first revue Dec. 7-8 in the Centre auditorium.

A UVic Folly, now in rehearsal, has the backing of university president Howard Petch who hopes the proceeds will be enough to fund a portion of the student aid program.

Although a strictly amateur effort, the participants are getting some professional and talented help, like lyrics by Chet Lambertson, stage direction by Peter Winn of the theatre department and production by Sonia Birch-Jones of public administration.

Skits, dances and original songs will be performed. Features include a 300-voice choir and a number performed by the academic deans. A member of the administration has written a skit about the university's skylarks, which nest in a preserve inside the ring road.

Tickets are $3 to the public, $2 to students.

Residents in Ottawa's New Edinburgh neighborhood are strolling past an old red brick house to catch a glimpse of Margaret Trudeau, who moved in late last week and is busy supervising painters in redecorating. She paid $132,000, $75,000 of which is mortgaged with a monthly payment of $840.14 at interest of 13½ per cent. "You have no right . . . no right at all," she said before slamming the door in the face of pushy Ottawa reporters. "This is personal. You have no idea how you've hurt me in the past — no idea at all. Just leave me alone please." If Mrs. Trudeau is seeking privacy, she won't find it at that location. The house is unfenced, with an unobstructed view from a small alley running between it and the next building.

Feinstein

Jacques Monet, a history professor at the University of Ottawa, received the first Jules and Gabrielle Leger Fellowship and accompanying $25,000.

The award, established by the federal government, is to be presented annually to a Canadian scholar doing research on the history and function of the Crown and the Governor-General.

Mayor Dianne Feinstein of San Francisco was campaigning door to door in the Fillmore district when a man suddenly appeared near her side, held a silver pistol at her head and pulled the trigger. A blue flame hissed up from the hammer area of the pistol and the startled mayor instinctively took a step backward. It turned out that the gun was actually a cigarette lighter, and Mrs. Feinstein decided, after hesitating briefly, to keep knocking on doors. It was less than a year ago that Mrs. Feinstein became mayor when her predecessor, George Moscone, was shot and killed by a disgruntled former city employee.

A bicycle stolen from Edward Crockett has been located — six years later and 240 kilometres away. Crockett was 14 at the time and living in Lancaster S.C. when someone stole the red, 10-speed bike. He said he had saved up $120 to buy it and cried when it was stolen. Early this week, a police officer in Reidsville, N.C., found the bike in an unpopulated area. Ownership was traced to Crockett through a Lancaster police identification sticker. Crockett, who now lives in Washington, D.C., was advised that his long lost bike is still "rideable," but he isn't sure he'll go to the trouble of claiming it.

Dear Abby:

As a pro who gets paid for writing scripts, articles, etc., I must be nuts writing to you. However, I can't resist pointing out your misuse of the expression, 'lucked out.' You wrote (in praise of Gamblers Anonymous): 'Many compulsive gamblers have lucked out by joining this wonderful group of people.'

According to the Dictionary of American Slang (Wentworth & Flexner) 'lucked out' means 'to be out of luck' or 'to have met with ill fortune or disaster.'

Marina Mort

Dear Mort:

According to Webster's New World Dictionary of the American Language, 'lucked out' means 'to be lucky' or 'to have things turn out favorably.' So, regardless of whether one buys my authority or yours, it would appear that I 'lucked out' either way.

Dear Abby:

Last night I watched a baby die.

The child was 11 months old and strangled on a piece of apple. The baby's mother was away and the child was being kept by a girl down the street.

By the time the baby-sitter arrived at our house, the child was probably dead. There were 10 people at the house where I was, and only one knew what to do. The rest of us watched helplessly and horror-stricken the hopeless efforts to revive the dying child.

The baby's mother, who will never live down the fact that she was not there; the 14-year-old baby-sitter who will never forget the fact that she could not help; and the 10 of us who will never forget the tragic consequences of that night, cannot be helped by the fact that this is such a common occurrence.

Abby, if only one person will take the time to learn CPR — cardiopulmonary resuscitation — and what to do in a case like this, then my letter will not be in vain.

But in any case, should there be a next time for me, I will know!

Debbie

Dear Debbie:

Thank you for writing. Readers, CPR instruction is free. For information concerning time and place of classes, contact the Red Cross or Heart Foundation.

Dear Abby:

You and the Mom, who can't understand her husband's objections to allowing their 13-year-old daughter to pierce her ears, should stick this in yours!

Some of us obstinate old dads feel strongly that defacement of the body or any of its appendages in pursuit of faddish fashion is unnecessary, unnatural and unwholesome.

It is every cook's duty to bribe the kids when it comes time for cleaning up the mess after a family meal your partner's cookbook

By MIKE McGRADY

There have been complaints. We've heard from some spouses who tell us their mates have been reading these recipes. That's okay. We've heard, further, that some partners have gone all the way and have even been cooking dinner. So far, so good. The complaints refer to what happens after dinner. After dinner the kitchen looks like a battlefield in a war movie, like a junkyard in the wake of a tornado — mountains of pots and pans waiting there for the Dishwashing Genie to make her nightly appearance.

Come on, people, this can't go on. Fair's fair, after all. If in the past one member of the family has been silly enough to both cook the dinner and wash the dishes, you have no choice in this matter. (See also page 32.)

On those nights that you cook dinner, you have to face up to your full responsibility and bribe one of the kids to do the dishes.

And since you may need extra cash for that bribe, tonight's meal is a penny-pincher's special. Tuna Rockefeller is a low-budget ripoff of oysters Rockefeller — if you love oysters Rockefeller, you're going to like tuna Rockefeller. Similarly, if you love chocolate mousse, you're sure to like tonight's chocolate stuff — the difference between the two is measured in man-hours, your man-hours.

The Staples: Make sure these are all on hand: sugar, vanilla, egg, salt, pepper, milk, lemon, butter.

The Shopping List: Two seven-ounce cans of white-meat tuna; one-half pound bacon; flavored breadcrumbs; one pound fresh spinach; one bunch parsley; one box brown rice; four large ripe tomatoes; four ounces grated parmesan cheese; one small container sour cream; eight ounces semi-sweet chocolate.

4:30 p.m.: Since the dessert requires some time in the refrigerator, we'll begin with that.

Put one cup of milk into a saucepan over medium heat. Into the blender goes the semi-sweet chocolate, broken up into small chunks. Add a teaspoon of vanilla and, if you like, a couple of teaspoons of sugar. Break an egg into the blender. If you should happen to have a bottle of brandy nearby, a shot of brandy will only improve matters. And if you like the flavor of coffee mixed with chocolate, you might consider adding a teaspoon of instant coffee.

Opps, the milk! As the milk reaches its boiling point, remove it from the heat. (Danger! If you happen to be looking the other way, you will turn around to see a Niagara of boiling milk cascading over your stove.)

Pour the scalded milk directly into the blender.

After a minute or so, turn on blender until the chocolate mixture is smooth. Pour into dessert dishes and place in the refrigerator.

5:15 p.m.: Rinse the spinach carefully in a pot of clear water. Do it asecond time. Cook the spinach in a covered saucepan containing a small amount of water boiling over a medium-high heat. In just a few moments, when the spinach is soft, drain it and chop it as fine as you can. You may want to run it through the blender — but only after the chocolate has been washed away.

Fry the bacon in a large frying pan over medium heat, turning the bacon once and then draining it on paper towels. Put the chopped spinach into a baking dish and add the bacon, crumbled into pieces. Then add a half cup of the seasoned bread crumbs, about half the grated parmesan cheese, half the sour cream, some salt and pepper and the juice of a half a lemon. Finally, open the cans of tuna fish, drain away the liquid and flake the tuna into the mixture. Stir this up. Sprinkle the rest of the parmesan cheese over the top.

Preheat the oven to 350 degrees.

5:45 p.m.: Tonight may well mark your family's introduction to brown rice, as opposed to white rice. The main difference between the two is that brown rice has not been polished and refined and stripped of its vitamins. However, since it is a scientific fact that all kids instinctively choose unhealthy food over healthy food, you may be subjecting yourself to some personal criticism here.

It's up to you to guide your family past the health-food barrier. Follow the cooking directions on the rice box and then, just before serving, add a fistful of minced parsley, a large slab of butter and some salt and pepper. If that doesn't work, try some chives, or some cooked onions, or some parmesan cheese, or almost anything else you can lay your hands on.

6:00 p.m.: Rinse the tomatoes, cut them in halves and sprinkle them with salt, pepper, dots of butter and some of the bread crumbs.

6:10 p.m.: Put the tuna Rockefeller into the oven; it will be ready in 20 minutes.

6:20 p.m.: Grill the tomato halves under the broiler for a few minutes, just until the bread crumbs have turned brown.

6:30 p.m.: Final steps. Check the Chocolate Stuff in the refrigerator; it should be firm and well chilled. The tomatoes and the rice are hot and the tuna Rockefeller is ready. Anything else? Just one little thing. Take the pots and pans and place them in a basin of hot soapy water. This is for use after the dinner is eaten.

Hot fluids can inflict real injuries

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

I've been trying to tell my son that drinking very hot fluids is dangerous. He won't listen to me. How can I convince him? He is 15. He drinks coffee that is so hot I can barely touch the outside of the mug.

Dear Mrs. S.:

Your son is not alone in this foolish habit. Many doctors have seen patients with severe burns of the lips, the tongue, the palate, the pharynx and even the esophagus, caused by drinking extremely hot fluids.

Can you imagine what such heat can do to the delicate lining of the mouth when it can actually cause a severe burn of the skin? Fortunately, the body's defenses are great. The cooling mechanism for hot fluids is quite remarkable, but it is unfair to impose unreasonable heat on the body structures and expect that nature alone will take care of it.

It is true that some people have a higher tolerance for heat than others. Your son may be one of them. You can only hope that he changes his habits before he inflicts painful injury on himself.

Dear Doctor:

My ear, nose and throat doctor has found that I have a white patch on one of my vocal cords. I can't spell the name. What worries me is can it turn into a cancer? What can be done about it?

Mr. J.L.C.

Dear Mr. C.:

The condition you describe is known as "leukoplakia." These white patches can also occur in the mouth, on the tongue and on the palate. They are readily recognized by their white or gray color.

Irritation due to pipe smoking and cigarette smoking is the most frequent cause. Some people have a tendency to bite the inner surface of their cheeks. This may produce these white patches, too.

Dental problems that chronically irritate the mucous membrane lining of the mouth, and badly fitting dentures, are also known causes of leukoplakia.

By a simple procedure, known as "laryngoscopy," the leukoplakial patch can be removed.

Sometimes, leukoplakia are said to be "pre-cancerous." Personally, I do not like the term. For, even when the condition is found to be benign (non-cancerous) many people have already built up so much anxiety that they spend their lives in constant terror of an impending calamity.

As a general rule, all doctors keep patients with leukoplakia under observation at regular intervals, just to be sure that no problem is developing.

"If the house was on fire, who would you save first, me or the cat?"

Cleaning up: Some tips the experts don't give

By WILLIAM RICE
Washington Post

"It's too mundane!" said someone near and dear to me when I expressed astonishment that without exception, the great culinary references offer no guidance toward cleaning up in the wake of preparing a meal. "You could read 100 cookbooks and think your job stops when you leave the range," I continued.

She said nothing, which was not entirely fair.

I clean up in the kitchen quite often and sometimes succeed in convincing myself that I like doing it. (I should probably add that I also "like" jogging. Perhaps it's a matter of what sociologosts call mind-set.) Nonetheless, there is little as forbidding at 1 a.m. as finding yourself face to face with a forest of wine glasses. Some of them you won't trust to the dishwasher. The others are too tall or too broad to fit.

When it comes to entertaining, there are, it should be noted, two schools of cleaner-uppers: Those who are compelled to finish before they go to bed and those who postpone the inevitable until the next day.

When it comes to daily kitchen cleanup, there are two schools, too: Those who worship speed, and those who are dedicated to efficiency.

Rarely will a passionate gastronomic debate over, say, the exact ingredients of a sauce gribiche — become as heated as an argument between two people who approach dishwashing from opposite tacks. Even the order of doing things takes on a magnified significance. Glasses first, royalists insist, then plates, silverware and finally utensils. Then there is the totally democratic approach: Whatever is closest to the sink goes in first.

In any case, the less to do the better. But how does one cut down on cleaning up?

The best waay is to eat out. The worst way is to eat TV dinners and use throw-away utensils and paper cups. Between these two poles is the gray area where most of us dwell. When eating alone, it's between you and God whether the hash is transferred from the skillet to a plate.

But at the table with family or guests options are limited. Having spent several years bending children to society's unnatural demand that they eat with forks and spoons, it makes little sense to suddenly lock the silver drawer. Salad and cheese can be served on the same plate, but your dessert will lose something if it is spooned into a puddle of leftover salad dressing. Coffee does cry out for a cup of its own.

In the kitchen, however, it is possible to improve the situation. One way, which in reality is only psychological, is to clean up as you go along. By the end you will have washed as many pots and pans or basting spoons, but a clean kitchen and sink make for a better cook — really — and the pile you tackle after the meal has ended won't be so high.

Take a lesson from the Chinese and use the same pan for more than one function. A simmering soup produces steam, which can cook food placed on a rack above it. Your hands, as James Beard says, are still the most valuable kitchen tool. Use them more. They're much easier to wash than utensils. It is also much faster to clean a knife and cutting board than a food processor or blender. Do as much cutting and chopping as possible by hand, especially with small quantities.

Think about the cleanup when planning a menu. If the main-course preparation is complex, don't choose a dessert that requires use of all your baking equipment. (When entertaining, cooking ahead helps, but you still need to reserve some energy to face your guests and the next day.) Don't bother to wash out liquid or dry measures between portioning out ingredients for a single recipe. The egg yolks and the milk are going into the same bowl, it won't hurt if a few drops of one intermingle with the other in the measuring cup.

Finally, the most obvious labor-saver is the one-pot recipe. But the frequent appearance of a convenient casserole may be appreciated more by the cook-cleaner than by the rest of the family. Examine other recipes closely. Often they contain unnecessary elaborations. For a stew or chili, you don't have to saute meat in one frying pan, vegetables in another and then combine them in a third. Rethink the recipe and add the ingredients to a single pot or pan in logical sequence.

COOKING GIANTS like James Beard never mention what's involved with cleaning up after a big or small, fancy or simple meal — it's all over with completion of preparation, they seem to imply by failing to mention what's involved in any of their many columns, books and programs. Beard, shown here dining with his friend Edna Lewis in New York, has, however, taken the stand that your hands are still the most convenient kitchen tool — and that in the cleanup after a feast they are much more easy to wash than most other untensils found in the kitchen. It is also much faster to clean a knife and cutting board than a food processor or blender. Do as much cutting and chopping as possible by hand, especially with small quantities, thus taking perhaps a little more time initially but saving more time in the long run.

Several good foods improve with keeping. One is Christmas Pudding, another is Christmas Cake. There are others.

But first is the question — who can afford to make these traditional rich foods with today's recently raised prices for dried fruits? The answer is — to use suitable substitutes and to use less quantities than tradition dictated for so many years.

We really don't benefit by eating either the old style pudding or the cake that is almost solid fruit with maximum sugar and minimum of flour dough to hold the fruit together. But we have now learned to reduce sugar to almost the vanishing point and the lesser quantity of fruits still provides plentiful natural sugar for pleasant eating.

Recent interest in drying fresh fruits at home will make it possible for those imaginative homemakers to use the fruits, reconstituted, as healthful ingredients in Christmas Pudding and Christmas Cake. Also the vegetable garden (or produce store) supplies certain suitable vegetables and some fresh fruit for the pudding and the cake.

Here is an early reminder that neither pudding nor cake can be kept for more than about a month without freezing — they are moist and the wheat germ, bran and wholewheat flour soon mould when moist. I shall keep the puddings on refrigerator shelves, but the cakes seem less moist.

Another reminder — there is no reason to serve Christmas Pudding on December 25 and the Christmas Cake in the week following.

Each of these special foods may be featured at a special gathering of friends and relatives on two or more separate occasions, with other simple food as an entree. Think about this. It may help solve the problem of having people refuse your masterpiece of cooking because they are already filled with a heavy first course.

Before starting on these recipes look through the ingredients to be sure you have them ready to prepare as indicated. Some may have a different ingredient substituted.

Beginners at cooking will want to tackle one recipe at a time. The Cake is made more quickly than the Pudding.

But first the Pudding recipe. I used one six-inch pudding basin, one five-inch, and two small Pyrex custard cups for "tasters". Check to be sure you have saucepans with close fitting lids to keep steam in while in constantly boiling water.

CHRISTMAS PUDDING

- 1½ cups cooked prunes, drained
- 1 cup dates cut up
- 1 apple raw, grated
- 1 lemon, juice, pulp, grated rind
- 1 cup grated raw potato
- 1 cup grated raw carrot
- 1 Tbsp blackstrap molasses
- 2 Tbsp brown sugar
- ⅔ cup soft margarine
- 1 cup wholewheat flour
- ½ cup mixed wheat germ and wheat bran
- 1 tsp salt
- 1 tsp (scant) baking soda
- ½ tsp grated ginger root or ginger powder
- 2 small eggs or 1 large prune juice or orange juice as required for mixing, two large mixing bowls or saucepans for mixing.

Into first bowl, put prepared fruit, with lemon juice over apple at once to prevent loss of vitamins. Add prepared vegetables, mixing into fruit as grated. Add molasses, sugar and margarine. Stir all to mix well.

Measure all next five dry items into second bowl. Stir to mix. At this stage, you can cover and leave both bowls until next day if necessary.

Keep overnight in a cold place, making a note on what remains to be added.

The next step is to beat eggs in small bowl; add to dry mixture. Begin adding dry mixture (now with eggs) to fruit and vegetables. Stir well to blend, using a little of the drained-off prune juice if needed.

Grease chosen pudding bowls; spoon in mixture no more than two-thirds full to allow for expansion while cooking.

Place waxed paper loosely over top of bowl; cover with strong square of clean white cloth (must be cotton or linen to stand boiling). Tie with string around bowl rim. Knot corners of cloth securely across top of bowl. This makes it easy to lift into and out of boiling water.

If no suitable cloth handy, use heavy foil cover over the waxed paper and extra care in handling to avoid scalding hands, and, or, dropping the bowls.

Have enough boiling water in pan to reach well below rim of bowls; bowl must not be under water otherwise pudding will be soggy.

Put pudding into boiling water and return to boiling quickly; then turn heat down to maintain a constant boil for required time. No peaking until end of steaming unless boiling water must be added. You can tell by whether a little steam is escaping and also by the sounds.

Time for 6-inch bowl is 3 hours; time for 5-inch bowl is 2 hours; time for custard cups is 1 hour, 10 minutes.

"Tasters" proved light, fruity enough, wholly good.

Wet covers and waxed papers are removed from puddings when cooked, to allow slight drying to take place. When cool, replace with fresh waxed paper and store in refrigerator until needed. Steam as before for one hour (larger sizes) before serving.

Check frequently for first signs of mould. If found, scrape off, and re-steam for one hour.

A Christmas Cake in a similar vein uses dried pears, peaches and apricots if home dried fruits are not available. Mixed packages of the fruits are on grocery shelves at around one dollar 50 cents for one pound. This seems to me a better buy than separate quantities of conventional dried fruits for cakes and puddings. Prunes in the mixed bag are used in either a dark fruit cake or in the puddings.

CHRISTMAS CAKE

- 2 cups dried pears, peaches, apricots, cooked
- 1½ cups wholewheat flour
- 1½ cups unbleached flour
- ½ tsp salt
- 1 tsp baking powder
- ¼ cup soft margarine
- 2 Tbsp sugar
- 3 small eggs
- ¾ cup ground sunflower seeds
- a little lemon juice

Cover dried fruit with just enough water, simmer until partly tender. Cut roughly into pieces to make 2 cups. Add enough chopped dates to make up to 3 cups fruit. Add juice of half lemon, with pulp.

Measure flours, salt and baking powder into mixing bowl.

In small bowl, cream margarine with sugar; add eggs and beat well. Add egg mixture to fruit mixture, then start adding dry ingredients gradually, with the ground sunflower seeds to make a stiff cake dough.

Spoon dough into greased loaf pan 9x5x3-inches, lined with brown paper well greased.

Put into slow oven 325 deg. F for 30 minutes; then down to 300 deg. F for another 90 minutes. Test with clean knife for doneness.

Don't let this cake become dark on top; cover loosely with foil if you think it necessary in your oven.

To use this long period of slow heat economically, I made a big pan of granola and a cookie tray of crisp oat cookies with the same heat, plus a split pea soup simmering on the top burner over the oven heat vent.

The weight of freshly baked cake is 2½ pounds at roughly estimated cost of 2 dollars 50 cents.

The "taster" sample baked in a pyrex cup passed the test with honors, hoping it wouldn't be too long before the big one would come into use.

I consider my time and money has been well spent since both "taster" samples passed the test with honors. Here's hoping many others will enjoy similar results.

For hungry jaws . . .

Ihave often been asked whether or not shark is edible. The answer is quite definitely yes, and one of the best seafood dishes I've ever sampled was a platter of mako shark prepared teriyaki-style and cooked over a charcoal fire by my friend Shizuo Tsuji, the distinguished head of the Tsuji Hotel School in Osaka, Japan.

He happened to be a visitor in my home when a neighbor and fisherman brought in a mako steak from a shark he had caught off Montauk, N.Y. Shizuo proceeded to cut the fish into cubes before marinating it in a blend of soy sauce, mirin (a sweet sake), garlic, ginger and so on.

Dogfish is another excellent fish that can be prepared in many ways. I personally prefer it dipped in batter and deep fried.

Unfortunately, much of the shark that is caught in North American waters is improperly handled, and it spoils easily. When mishandled, shark flesh has a distinct smell and taste of ammonia. Ideally, when it is caught it must be packed in ice as quickly as possible and should be treated as highly perishable.

For centuries, of course, the Chinese have prized the fins of sharks for shark's fin soup, considered one of the great banquet dishes of the Chinese table.

Here is a recipe for smoked shark from the University of California Co-operative Extension:

SMOKED SHARK

The best species to use for a smoked product is the soupfin, thresher, leopard, angel and dog shark (pin back). The blue shark is best prepared as jerky due to the softer nature of the flesh. This recipe also works well with salmon.

1. Fillet about four pounds of shark and cut the pieces into chunks or strips about one to 1½ inches thick and two to three inches wide.

2. Prepare a brine of two cups of well-packed dark brown sugar, two-thirds of a cup of salt, one tablespoon seafood seasoning (optional) and two quarts of water. Mix well until salt and sugar are dissolved.

3. Soak shark chunks in the brine overnight.

4. Remove the shark from the brine and rinse well with fresh water.

5. Place the shark on a rack in a cool, shady, breezy place to dry for about one hour. A tan shiny skin, or pellicle, should form on the surface.

6. Smoke in a commercial or homemade smoker for 10 to 14 hours, depending on the outside temperature. It takes longer to dry in cold weather. The temperature of the smoker should be between 130 and 150 degrees.

7. Wrap each piece of fish in heavy wax paper. Some moisture is left in the smoked product, so it should be refrigerated. Smoked shark should last two weeks or more, longer if frozen.

A little learning, and so on: In a recent column that concerned those who love and those who loathe garlic, I referred to the former as alliumphiles and the latter as alliumphobes.

questions & answers

Q. I have a great liking for the dish known as seviche. I am curious to know the origin of the word. Can you tell me?

A. It derives from the Spanish word "cebollo," which means onion. On some menus, seviche is spelled cebiche. If I am not mistaken, chopped onion was a dominant ingredient in any preparation of the raw fish and lime juice dish.

Today, of course, seviche, like chili con carne, come in limitless variations and flavors and some of the versions do not contain onion at all.

Q. The sieve part of my flour sifter through years of use is now caked with dried flour that has come in contact with moisture. How do you clean a flour sifter?

A. I can only speak for my own flour sifter, which is of all-metal construction. If those flour splotches are really caked on, you should soak the sifter in hot water with a detergent. If your sifter is all metal, you can then put it in the dishwasher for a thorough cleaning.

If your sifter has a wooden handle, simply soak the sieve portion in hot detergent and clean it by hand.

Q. During a recent power failure, all the foods in my freezer defrosted and had to be thrown out. A neighbor tells me that I could have saved the various meat and poultry broths and refrozen them. Is it dangerous to refreeze those broths?

A. Not if they are refrozen a short while after they are defrosted. As a double guarantee, however, you might very well — before refreezing — put them in saucepans and bring them to the boil to guard against the development of bacteria.

Q. I make an excellent pie crust using lard as the principal fat. So many of my friends have become vegetarians I find I can't serve pie crust to everyone. Is there a decent substitute for lard?

A. Lard does, indeed, make an excellent pie crust. But almost any solid fat such as butter could be used as a substitute. The closest approximation to lard in my opinion would be a solid white shortening, the best-known of course, being Crisco.

Q. My husband and I used to enjoy lamb shoulder. But the price has reached a level where all we can afford is ground lamb or breast of lamb. I realize breast of lamb is mostly bone and fat, and I wonder whether I'm really fooling myself by buying it. Can you tell me how much meat is in a pound of lamb breast?

A. The problem of deciding between a bonier, fattier cut of meat which costs less per pound (0.45 kg) and a more expensive but leaner cut with less bone is particularly relevant in these days of rising meat prices. The answer, of course, depends on the yield per pound (0.45 kg) and the relative cost of the two items.

Lamb breast yields about 5 ½ (155.7 g) ounces of lean meat per pound (0.45 kg) while lamb shoulder, purchased with the bone left in yields about 8 (226.8 g) ounces of lean, cooked meat.

To determine the true cost per ounce (28.3 g) of cooked meat, you simply divide the cost per pound (0.45 kg) by the yield of meat per pound (0.45 kg). In Boston, where lamb was recently on sale, ribs were selling for $1.29 per pound (0.45 kg), while shoulder cost $1.69 a pound (0.45 kg). Thus, rib meat cost $.23 per ounce (28.3 g) and shoulder meat $.21. In this case shoulder turned out to be slightly more economical. At other times lamb breast may be a significantly better buy.

We should mention, however, that lamb breast is, of course, quite fatty. So when you do use it, it is a good idea to select recipes in which the meat is first boiled and then cooled. That step has two advantages. First, the fat can be trimmed more thoroughly. And second, the stock which results can be skimmed and later used as a base for making soup.

Q: I prepare all of my son's baby food at home. So far, I've used only fresh fruits and vegetables, but there are times when using canned and frozen produce would be more convenient. How do you feel about this?

A: There are perhaps two points to be considered in using processed fruits and vegetables. The one most people think of first (though not necessarily the most important one) is the relative amounts of vitamins they contain.

During the summer months when a great variety of locally grown produce picked at its peak is widely available, fresh fruits and vegetables may be the richest sources of vitamins. During the winter, however, when much of the produce is picked underripe and shipped long distances and then either stored for a significent period of time or allowed to sit around in the supermarket, fresh produce may actually contain less of certain nutrients than frozen or canned produce.

In any case, as long as a child is eating a variety of foods in amounts appropriate for his age, differences in vitamin levels are unlikely to make a significant impact on his nutritional well-being.

Remember, however, that water-soluble vitamins are leached out when fruits and vegetables are cooked in water.

The other, possibly more important consideration in choosing between fresh and processed fruits and vegetables relates to the question of what is added during processing. In the case of fruits, the added ingredient is, of course, sugar. We would strongly recommend that you avoid syrup-packed fruits, choosing instead those packed in water or juice

Beans make it to list of international cuisine

By LESLIE HANSCOM
Newsday

I noticed a nick the other day in the enamel on my bean pot. At first it was depressing to discover an imperfection in my favorite cooking vessel, but I turned to the consolations of philosophy. After all, what other old friend could I think of who was not also showing signs of wear?

Nobody really needs a highfalutin bean pot from Belgium with a coating of orange enamel. I bought it for ignoble reasons in the first place. Everybody who is grounded in true principles knows that baked beans is a dish fit to set before royalty, but the anxiety prone are always timid about such things. About beans, I used to be like the unadmirable craven who genuinely loves a genuinely-deserving homely girl, but is still embarrassed to do anything about it.

So I bought the bean pot to put a fancy facade for company on a food which is marvelous even if cooked in a burned-out paint pail. The beans didn't need it; the pot was a cloak for the social insecurity of the cook.

As though I needed to feel any more red-faced about this, I have just made an amazing discovery. In leafing through the proofs of a forthcoming book called The New International Cuisine by Armand Aulicino, I find that one of the foods for which he gives a detailed recipe is . . . do I read correctly? Baked beans now belongs to the new international cuisine? Nobody ever tells me anything soon enough.

Aulicino's book is about the new style of cooking practiced by the school of French chefs who realize that today's eater wants to have his cake and not pay the penalty in heft. The author has sorted over the various national cuisines and re-interpreted the classic recipes in a way which cuts down on the calories and cholesterol. In picking his way through American cookery, he was smart enough not to overlook baked beans.

Moving up in the world of fine foods

One rejoices in the elevation of baked beans to the aristocracy of food, but at the same time, the idea is a little hard to take in. For me, it's as if baked beans is something you eat to stay svelte. It is true the beans we bake do not, like many other edible seeds, have a lot of fat in them, but the classic way of cooking them is to put in enough salt pork to offset that oversight of nature..

In Alicino's version, most of the common ingredients are included. He allows a cup of molasses or maple syrup. But the salt pork is replaced by Canadian bacon, which is all lean. Ordinarily, I wouldn't be passing on this sort of information without giving it a try first, but here I feel entirely safe. Dried beans of all kinds are such good things that it would take a lot of ingenuity to cook them into something bad. In a bean pot, you can overmoisten and over-cook them and come out with mush, or you can let them dry out and cook them into bullets. Otherwise the hazards are unknown to me.

How can I apologize for ever feeling apologetic about beans? Back in the days when ethnic humor was enjoyed by everybody, Fanny Brice used to play a lady on the radio with a very heavy accent. I remember a time in which this usually redoubtable matron was spreading out a meal at a public picnic ground and suddenly feeling self-conscious about the strong ethnicity of her food. Seeking to conceal the latkes, she instructed her husband, "Sam, hide them under the herring." I should have learned from that not to fall into similar error.

Although the elevation of baked beans to haute cuisine is recent news to me, what, after all, is cassoulet other than baked beans in one of its more elaborate forms? Depending on the province of France and what is on hand in the larder, the sausages which are a standard ingredient of the dish can be augmented with goose or lamb, and what you have is a product which blurs the dividing line between peasant food and the inventions of the great chefs.

It has always seemed a small mircale to me that nature could pack so much protein benefit into a package like a bean, which includes so many other practical advantages as well. In its dried state, it is virtually immortal in its immunity to spoilage, and it has succored the poor down the centuries. "Alwaie the bygger (beggar) eateth the beane," said some writer of Middle English whom I must have encountered in an almanac somewhere.

Touch of Hawaii and B.C. in Golden Delicious Pineapple Pie

Delicious and golden apple and pineapple

kay spicer

Delicious apples, Golden or Red, are wonderful for desserts. An excellent all-purpose apple, the Golden Delicious is juicy and firm with a rich, unique flavor. It cooks firm. The Red Delicious, classified as a "sweet" apple with a pleasing tartness, is crisp and juicy. It's great for eating fresh and it keeps well.

The following tasty apple delights will charm and please dessert lovers of all ages.

GOLDEN DELICIOUS PINEAPPLE PIE
Makes 6 servings

An unusually tasty combination — done in your microwave.

1 baked 9-inch pie shell
1 can (14 ounce) undrained pineapple chunks
3 tablespoons quick-cooking tapioca
1 teaspoon cinnamon
⅔ cup sugar
1 Golden Delicious apples, peeled, cored and sliced
1 tablespoon butter
Whipped cream
Cinnamon

Combine pineapple, tapioca, cinnamon and sugar in a large glass bowl. Allow to stand at least 10 minutes. Add butter and apple slices. Cover. Microwave at High 4 minutes; stir; recover and continue microwaving another 4 minutes. Uncover; microwave 6 minutes, stirring after 3 minutes. Cool 15 minutes. Spoon into pasty shell. Chill until set. Top with whipped ream sprinkled with cinnamon if desired.

APPLE CHARLOTTE
Makes 8 servings

Butter
½ cup granulated sugar
6 to 8 slices bread
10 or 12 Delicious apples
Grated rind 1 lemon
2 or 3 tablespoons apricot jam
2 tablespoons butter
Whipped cream

Butter an 8-inch round cake pan or casserole; dust with grandulated sugar. Cut bread slices into fingers about 1-inch wide and a little longer than the depth of the tin. Fry them golden in a little hot butter or oil, on one side only. Line the bottom and sides of the tin, brown side next to the tin, with these fingers of bread. Peel, core and cut the apples in thick slices; put in saucepan with the grated lemon rind, jam and 1 tablespoon butter. Cook over low heat until soft and smooth. Spoon into lined mold; cover top with the remaining fried bread. Bake in 375°F oven 30 minutes. Cool 5 minutes; turn out onto a hot serving dish. Serve with whipped cream.

STEWED APPLES WITH MAPLE CREAM
Makes 4 servings

4 large Delicious apples
4 tablespoons apricot jam
1 tablespoon shredded orange rind
4 tablespoons sugar
Water
2 teaspoons unflavored gelatin
1 egg yolk
3 tablespoons flour
¾ cup hot milk
1 egg white
¼ cup maple syrup
½ cup whipped cream
Toasted slivered almonds

Peel and halve the apples; remove core. Put jam, orange rind, 3 tablespoons sugar and ½ cup water in a pan and cook to a syrupy consistency. Poach apples gently until just tender. Cool, arrange on a flat serving dish and fill centres with Maple Cream.

Maple Cream: Soften gelatin in ¼ cup water. Put 1 egg, 1 egg yolk, 1 tablespoon sugar and flour in a bowl and beat with a whisk until smooth; beat in gelatin. Pour on hot milk and stir over low-medium heat until the mixture comes to a boil. Remove from heat; stir over ice until cool. Beat egg white until stiff but not dry; fold into egg mixture; stir in maple syrup. Let set until nearly firm; fold in whipped cream. Spoon into a pastry bag with rose tube and pipe onto top of apples; pour over the syrup in which the apples were cooked and scatter a few slivered almonds over the top. For a delicious, simple dessert, omit the cream filling.

Secret of a salad freshness, variety

Following are some suggestions for dressings that will complement a variety of salads. Use these as basics and add and subtract flavorings you like at will. Just be sure your herbs and spices are flavorful. Fresh is preferable if available, but dried herbs are perfectly acceptable. They do deteriorate, however, so if they have lost their color and aroma, invest in new ones. You'll be surprised at the difference that will make.

SEAFOOD SALAD

Lettuce leaves
1 (10 ounce) package frozen asparagus spears, cooked, or canned white asparagus, drained
1 pound large shrimp, cooked, shelled and deveined
1-2 pound scallops or cubed white fish, cooked in butter
2 hard-cooked eggs, sliced
Avocado Hollandaise Dressing

In large platter arrange lettuce leaves and top with asparagus, shrimp, scallops and hard-cooked eggs, arranged in any fashion desired. Garnish olives. Serve with dressing. Makes about 6 servings

AVOCADO HOLLANDAISE

2 eggs
1-4 cup lemon juice
1-2 cup butter or margarine, melted
1 avocado, peeled and seeded
1 teaspoon salt
Onion salt
Dash cayenne

Blend eggs with lemon juice in blender until lemon colored. Slowly add bubbly hot butter over low speed. Cut up avocado and blend in butter mixture until smooth. Add salt, onion salt to taste and cayenne. Chill at least 30 minutes. Makes 1 1-4 cups.

HAWAIIAN GODDESS

1 (6 ounce) can pineapple juice
1-3 cup wine vinegar
2 tablespoons sugar
2 teaspoons soy sauce
1 tablespon cornstarch
1 tablespoon catsup
3 drops hot pepper sauce
1-4 cup oil
1 tablespoon minced green onion
1 tablespoon sesame seeds, optional

Combine pineapple juice with vinegar, sugar, soy sauce, cornstarch, catsup and hot pepper sauce in small saucepan. Bring to boiling over moderate heat. Simmer 1 minute, stirring constantly, until slightly thickened. Remove from heat and cool slightly. Stir in oil, green onion and sesame seeds, if desired. Use as dressing for vegetable or meat salads. Makes about 1 cup.

YOGURT PINEAPPLE

2 eggs
1-2 cup sugar or to taste
1-2 cup pineapple juice
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 cup vanilla yogurt
1-2 teaspoon poppy seeds

Beat eggs lightly in saucepan. Add sugar, pineapple juice and lemon juice. Cook over medium low heat, stirring, until thickened. Cool. Blend in yogurt and poppy seeds.

Serve with fruit salad such as a combination of sliced kiwi fruit, melon balls, honeydew wedges, grapes, sliced bananas dipped in lemon juice and pomegranate seeds. Makes about 2 cups dressing.

Rustic simplicity hidden behind classic labels

the 60-minute gourmet

In French menu planning, several general, all-purpose names signify foods that are unpretentious and family-style. These are not classic names like Du Barry (which always means cauliflower in a dish) or Argenteuil (which indicates asparagus) or Crecy (which indicates carrots). These are names like menaere and paysanne and bonne femme. They stand for rustic simplicity.

On a recent occasion in my home I prepared for my family and neighbors a simple but good dish of pork chops that had been braised and cooked with potatoes and onions. It was an impromptu meal, assembled and put together on the spur of the moment. One of the guests asked me the name of the dish, and I answered almost reflexively "bonne maman," for that is another of those vague terms that stand for the feel of a dish rather than one to indicate a traditional or classic composition. Bonne maman, of course, means good mother, and I have eaten dishes that bore that name since I was an infant.

As I said, that meal came about using foods that were readily available in my home at one moment in time. Cauliflower was just coming into the roadside markets in Long Island (and cauliflower is especially good this year). This became the accompanying vegetable, an improvised and incredibly easy dish to make. You simply parboil the cauliflower to get rid of the raw taste, drain and chop it in the saucepan with the side of a heavy metal kitchen spoon, add a dash of curry powder and chopped shallots and cream and it is ready to serve.

The pork chops bonne maman demand a total cooking time of about half an hour. It is best to get them started on the stove before getting on to the cauliflower. Once the pork chops have started to brown on one side, you should break the cauliflower into "flowerettes" and proceed from there. The two dishes can easily be timed to be ready for the table at more or less the same moment.

COTES de BONNE MAMAN

(Braised pork chops with potatoes and onions)

4 centre-cut loin pork chops, each about one-half pound.

Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.

4 potatoes, about 1 pound.

1 tablespoon oil.

8 very small white onions, peeled (see note).

2 tablespoons red wine vinegar.

1. Sprinkle the chops with salt and pepper and set aside.

2. Peel the potatoes and cut them lengthwise into quarters. Put them in a saucepan with cold water to cover. Bring to the boil and simmer about 30 seconds. Drain.

3. When the potatoes are cooked, heat the oil in a heavy skillet large enough to hold the chops in one layer. Add the chops and cook on both sides until golden brown all over, about five minutes.

4. Scatter the onions and potatoes around the chops. Cook, turning the potatoes, onions and chops, until the potatoes and onions start to take on color, about five minutes. Cover closely and cook about 10 minutes.

5. Pour off all the fat from the skillet. Add the vinegar and water. Cover and cook 15 minutes until chops are tender.

Yield: 4 servings.

Note: If very small onions are not available, use two larger onions cut into quarters.

CHOU-FLEUR au CARI
(Curried cauliflower)

1 head of cauliflower, about 2 pounds with leaves.

one-quarter cup milk.

Salt to taste.

1 tablespoon finely chopped shallots.

1 teaspoon curry powder.

one-half cup heavy cream.

Freshly ground pepper to taste.

1 tablespoon butter.

1. Cut away and discard the leaves from the cauliflower. Cut away and discard the core of the cauliflower.

2. Break the cauliflower into large "flowerettes." Put the pieces into a saucepan and add cold water to cover. And the milk and salt.

3. Bring to the boil and cook 15 to 20 minutes or until the cauliflower is tender but not soft. Drain. Return the cauliflower to the saucepan. Using the side of a heavy metal spoon, chop the pieces of cauliflower until they are coarse. Add the shallots, curry powder and cream. Add salt and pepper to taste. Cook, stirring, until piping hot. Stir in the butter.

Yield: 4 servings.

Spinster leaves $1M to the church

LONDON (Reuter) — A spinster who died here last month left her entire estate, valued at more than $1 million, to the Roman Catholic Church, lawyer Edward Hackett said Monday.

Betty Ann Murray, 65, who lived alone, bequeathed her 600-acre farm, several other pieces of real estate and holdings of stocks and bonds to the church.

Dangerous chemical still used

WINNIPEG (CP) — Benzene, a cancer-causing agent banned in Manitoba and Ontario high schools and at the University of Manitoba, is still used in laboratories at the University of Winnipeg.

The chemical, known to induce leukemia, is listed in the Manitoba Workplace Safety and Health Act as hazardous. Its main function is as a solvent.

The use of benzene in the labs was publicized Oct. 24 in the university's student newspaper, The Uniter.

'Muscle' car ads face curbs

EDMONTON (CP) — The only legal way to advertise a "muscle" car in Alberta within about a year will be with the size and sound of the engine if amendments to the Highway Traffic Act introduced in the legislature Monday are adopted.

The amendments would make raised rear ends illegal.

The list of changes the government wants to make to the law would also update equipment standards, primarily for trucks and trailers. As well, the changes would prohibit the removal or disabling of seat belt assemblies or passive restraint devices installed at the time of manufacture to comply with federal law.

Indian fishermen 'the losers'

WINNIPEG (CP) — Indian fishermen in Manitoba could lose anywhere from $29 million to $281 million if the massive Garrison diversion project is allowed to proceed, says a study prepared by a Winnipeg consulting firm.

The study, done for the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood by Rieber-Kremers and Associates, says 28 Indian communities would be severely affected by the irrigation project being built in North Dakota by the United States bureau of reclamation.

Hospital :debt' repayed

CALGARY (CP) — Edmund Morgan has collected $25,000 so that Holy Cross Hospital can buy another intra-aortic pump — the machine that saved his life after complicated heart surgery.

Morgan was released from the hospital last May after a double by-pass operation and told to stay home and take it easy.

Instead he pounded sidewalks, knocked on doors and telephoned all over the city to raise the money needed. He reached his goal at the end of October.

Citizens pushing for civic say

EDMONTON (UPC) — Voters in oil-rich Alberta's two largest cities, Edmonton and Calgary, have picked up where Californians left off and are now leading this nation in demanding a greater say in municipal politics.

Citizens in both cities have infuriated the established business communities and municipal councils by rising against city fathers through the use of petitions calling for plebiscites on public spending issues.

In Edmonton, a vote will be held Nov. 28 on a bylaw authorizing construction of a $32 million convention centre project. In Calgary, voters decide next month whether to approve borrowing $201.9 million for a civic centre.

The actions by the citizens' groups have been likened to the grass roots movement in California that forced Proposition 13 into law.

Proposition 13, passed by a two-to-one margin by California voters, reversed a state proposal to increase property taxes. Citizen reaction was so strong that Governor Edmund (Jerry) Brown promptly switched his stand on the issue.

The Edmonton plebiscite was ordered by the Court of Queen's Bench after the Edmonton Voters' Association under Ed Ewasiuk gathered 16,500 signatures demanding the city prepare a bylaw repealling the convention centre bylaw.

Those Edmontonians angered over the proposed convention centre may not fully appreciate the extent of their actions.

Carl Husby, finance director of the city of Long Beach, Calif., was directly affected by the effects of Proposition 13 and, in a recent speech in Edmonton, pinpointed the full meaning behind the call for a plebiscite.

"We are in the throes of social interest groups and colorful personalities who can easily influence the uninformed citizen," he said. The solution, he said, is for municipal officials to "recognize what the public is saying and keep the lines of communication open."

Ewasiuk ciriticized the city's "arrogant" assumption it could push the convention centre onto the public.

At $19 million it's a real a snow job

CALGARY (CP) — It would cost at least $19 million a year — more than four times the current snow-removal budget — to keep major city roads completely clear of snow and ice, city council's operations and development committee has been told.

The committee accepted a report from city engineers spelling out the cost of an ideal "bare pavement" policy and decided to urge council to stick with the present system that costs just over $4 million each winter.

The current policy give top priority to bus routes and major roads. Snowplows don't hit the streets until there is bad drifting or at least five centimetres of snow accumulates.

Sidewalks are not plowed unless city plows have pushed snow onto them and sanding is confined to the central business district, major roads and bus routes.

Plowing and sanding of steep hills, intersections with traffic lights and residential streets is done only when time permits.

Store prices linked to feed cost farming report

by leo quigley

The high cost of animal feed is reflected in the price of meat, eggs and milk on the supermarket shelf.

For farmers, the margin of profit is essentially the slice that is left between the selling price and the cost of feeding the animal.

For years, western Canadian barley was sold to feeders in eastern Canada solely by the Canadian Wheat Board, and was set slightly lower than the price of U.S. corn.

The practice, however, was surrounded with difficulties:

—It meant restricting the free movement of barley between western and eastern Canada;

—When barley prices plunged in western Canada because of surplus supplies, feeders in Ontario and Quebec felt they were being discriminated against because they did not have access to prairie feed supplies;

—It meant there was no market, or pricing mechanism, in western Canada and Canadian prices were being established on the basis of price levels set in Chicago.

Faced with these complaints, then transportation minister Otto Lang put a new feed grains policy in place in 1974, essentially establishing an open market.

Despite objections and several revisions, the system remained in effect and a substantial trade in feed grains blossomed on the Winnipeg Commodity Exchange where Western farmers found themselves with an alternative market.

So many farmers enjoyed the new sense of marketing freedom that last winter the wheat board announced that open market feed grains were taking up a "disproportionate" share of elevator and terminal space, at the expense of board sales of export grain.

At the time Lang, then minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, dismissed the claim as "ridiculous," saying, "People trying to discredit the system will also lie about terminals being congested. They misrepresent the facts."

To correct the alleged imbalance, the wheat board placed two restrictions on trading: a quota was placed on deliveries of open market barley, and the "paper switching" of barley stocks between elevators and terminals was disallowed.

A limited amount of switching was returned by the board, but with a fee attached and the quotas remained in place.

A recent report by the Winnipeg-based Canada Grain Council, however, appears to vindicate Lang's position.

"While stocks of non-board feed grain in the terminal elevators were construed to represent a problem in October 1978, there is no evidence that such a problem existed," the report says.

In its recommendations the grain council proposes that quotas on open market grain be ended and that the fee for switching reflect actual costs of the transaction.

Establishment of quotas, the report says, could discriminate against eastern feeders and, in western Canada "can be expected to bring back distress selling if such quotas restrict the total delivery capability of producers."

The report also says open market barley has shown it moves through the handling and transportation system more quickly and efficiently than board grains.

$4M arson blaze so school's out

DESMARAIS, Alta. (CP) — About 360 area students will miss school this week after a case of arson levelled their school and an adjacent health clinic in this northern Alberta community.

RCMP have charged a man after the fire caused $4 million damage to the two facilities. The St. Martin Health Clinic had just opened Sept. 15.

The Sisters of Providence nursing order who staff the clinic have set up an emergency clinic in their residence.

Les Hansen, principal of the Mistassiniy School, said the fire completely destroyed the school and all its contents: "It's gone. Period."

The school division is negotiating for the use of the old Indian residential school here and is trying to round up school supplies in hopes classes can be resumed next Monday.

Students were to have been home from Wednesday to Friday anyway as school division teachers attend a conference in Edmonton.

The Mistassiniy school served grades one to 12, with students coming from Desmarais, Wabasca and the community of Sandy Lake.

THE CORPORATION OF THE DISTRICT OF OAK BAY
BY-LAW NO. 3312

A By-law to dedicate certain municipal land for park purposes

WHEREAS The Corporation of the District of Oak Bay has acquired certain lands for park purposes;

AND WHEREAS the Municipal Council of The Corporation of the District of Oak Bay is empowered under Sec. 468(1) of the Municipal Act, R.S.B.C. 1960, with the assent of the electors, to dedicate for any public purposes, real property of more than one acre, owned by the Municipality;

NOW THEREFORE the Municipal Council of The Corporation of the District of Oak Bay (hereinafter called "the Corporation"), in open meeting assembled, enacts as follows:

1. The Corporation shall establish and dedicate for park purposes, those lands in the Municipality of Oak Bay, British Columbia, more particularly known and described as follows:
   (a) Anderson Hill Park (6.297 acres, more or less).
   Lots 21 and 22, Section 22, Victoria District, Plan 1062, except that part of Lot 21 included within boundaries of Plan 27916.

Opening lead — jack of spades.

There are lots of different once-in-a-lifetime situations you encounter in bridge. One of the best measures of a player's skill is the ability to respond properly to a rare set of circumstances and thus prove to one and all that bridge is basically a thinking person's game.

Consider this deal that features good defense and good offense. Let's say declarer wins the spade lead in dummy with the queen, plays a club and finessses the queen. South then leads a low spade and, after West follows low, successfully finesses the nine! This proves to be a key play after declarer finesses the jack of clubs, West following suit with the ten.

South next leads his king of spades to the ace and plays a third club from dummy, this time finessing the nine. As a result of all these dainty maneuvers, South makes exactly three notrump.

First, a word about the defense. West goofed at trick three when he played the spade six on South's five. He should have played the ten of spades on the five. This would have robbed dummy of the extra entry card needed by declarer to lead clubs three times from dummy. Putting up the ten of spades would have put the contract down one.

Second, a word about the offense. South could have made the contract legitimately had he made an unusual play at trick one. He should have won West's jack of spades in dummy with the ace, being careful to drop his king of spades on the ace!

After taking a club finesse, South would then lead a low spade toward dummy and finesse the nine to assure two more entries to dummy to take two more club finesses if necessary. West would have been helpless against this sequence of plays and South would have made nine untainted tricks.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Thursday, November 8, 1979
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): What you seek is close to home base. You have chance now to display independence, originality and pioneering spirit. What had been an obstacle becomes a stepping-stone to success. Leo, Aquarius individuals figure prominently.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Follow through on hunch; intuitive intellect now is honed to razor-sharpness. Cancer, Aquarius persons play key roles—so does the number 11. Short journey could be on agenda. Relative confides secret. Be discreet.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You can be at right place at right time for increasing earning capacity. Accent on payments, collections, successful investment. Social activity accelerates—be willing to expand circle of friends. Another Gemini figures prominently.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You gain a more solid foothold on security. Judgment, intuition are on target. Lead rather than follow. Make personal appearances, direct appeals. Don't insist on hanging on to past procedures. Break new ground. Aquarian could be very much in picture.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Gossip, secrets, romance dominate intriguing scenario. You may be asked to prepare presentation for media. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius persons figure prominently. Communicate with one confined to home, hospital. One close to you proves loyalty.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Friction is replaced by harmony—family member makes important concession. Domestic adjustment is on agenda and you benefit as result. Money, personal possessions, "territorial rights" are featured. A Taurus relative plays key role.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Goal comes into sharp, clear focus. Terms are defined, you separate fact from wishful thinking. One you "adore" returns the compliment. Morale can go sky-high! You get special assignment which can elevate prestige. The number 7 figures prominently.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Creative juices flow; you reach beyond what appeared to be a limitation. Perceive potential, open lines of communication, realize that travel is a definite possibility. Capricorn, Cancer individuals figure in interesting scenario.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Longstanding project can be completed. Accent on investment, leases, special purchases. You "wake up" with answers. One close to you discusses money and how it gets that way. Aries, Libra persons figure in key roles.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): New approach to legal complications is necessary. You receive accolade for achievement you had taken for granted. Leo, Aquarius persons figure prominently. Cooperate with one who sincerely expresses feelings concerning a new project.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Special attention to diet may be necessary. Keep recent resolutions concerning work, recreation and nutrition. One who shares basic interests helps you regain sense of direction. Another Aquarian inadvertently provides greater insight.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Personal relationship provides inspiration. You'll be in mood to celebrate. Outlet found for creative endeavors. Young person pays meaningful compliment. Accept accolade in gracious, mature manner. You deserve it!

IF NOVEMBER 9 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you recently proved that you can appeal to large segment of public. In December, you travel and reap benefits of creative effort. You are dedicated, determined, obstinate and attractive to members of opposite sex. Before year is finished, you will have transformed many wishes into realities. Capricorn, Cancer persons play important roles in your life. You respond remarkably well during times of crisis. People expect you to handle responsibility—you seldom disappoint them. Commitment made this past August was the right thing to do and now you know it.

Jim looked down over the boy's shoulder. "So that's what you've been figuring out," he commented. "It seems a very ordinary 4-digit number to me."

"Sure, Dad, but it is a bit special," Peter replied. "It's a perfect square, and its first half is just one more than its second half."

MANY TANKS saw action during the Second World War, but this one has been chosen to go on display at the Canadian War Museum in Ottawa. When task of moving the armored vehicle is finished, it will become a showpiece among the memorabilia from past Canadian war efforts.

Another F-18A snag

OTTAWA (CP) — The United States defence department has demanded a major change in McDonnell Douglas' offer for Canada's $2.3-billion fighter-plane contract, adding more fuel to the fighter controversy.

The U.S. department has told Canada that it should not give McDonnell Douglas credit in the fighter competition for $545 million in Cruise-missile business.

The McDonnell Douglas Corp. of St. Louis, Mo., was offering Canadian industry the Cruise-missile business as part of a package of more than $2 billion in benefits in exchange for the fighter contract.

Dale Church, deputy undersecretary of the U.S. defence department, explained defence department objections in a late October letter to the industry department.

Church said he understood that Ottawa had agreed some time ago not to give either General Dynamics or McDonnell Douglas credit for Cruise-missile work. General Dynamics and McDonnell Douglas are both involved in building the Cruise-missile system for the U.S. government and are competing for the Canadian fighter contract.

Church said he assumed giving McDonnell Douglas credit for Cruise-missile work is a mistake. He expected Canada would correct the problem.

Church's letter comes at the 11th hour in the fighter competition. Government negotiators have completed contract talks with the two finalists. Defence Minister Allan McKinnon has said he hopes the winner will be selected by the end of this year.

The U.S. defence department intervention is another blow for McDonnell Douglas whose F-18A fighter plane was widely considered to have the inside track in the competition. General Dynamics Corp of Fort Worth, Tex., has its single-engine F-16 in the competition.

Just last week, Northrop Corp. of Hawthorne, Calif., launched legal action against McDonnell Douglas for unilaterally offering to Canadian industry what Northrop said was Northrop business. Northrop is McDonnell Douglas' junior partner in the F-18A.

A spokesman for the government's fighter-project team said Tuesday it would be up to McDonnell Douglas to find replacement business if the American company is forced to drop the Cruise-missile work. The American company was committed to reaching a certain dollar figure in benefits for Canadian industry.

But a spokesman for the company suggested McDonnell Douglas will fight attempts to slice the Cruise-missile business from its contract offer. The Canadian government indicated in July, 1978, that Cruise-missile business would be counted as part of the industrial-benefits package, he said.

The fighter project team official said the government is looking at the issue now but no decisions have been made.

Asbestos firm profits rise

MONTREAL (CP) — Asbestos Corp., the target of an expropriation bid by the Quebec government, announced Tuesday a 33-per-cent increase in net profit and a 25-per-cent jump in sales during the first nine months of this year compared to the same period last year.

Net earnings totalled $12.8 million, or $4.52 a share, on sales of $126.4 million.

Petro-Can share sale labelled money-loser

CALGARY (CP) — Canadians would lose hundreds of millions of dollars if the federal government sells Petro-Canada's shares instead of giving them away, the head of the Petro-Canada study group said Tuesday.

Answering questions at a news conference, Don McDougall said Ottawa has put $1 billion into the national oil company and could get much of that back by selling shares in Petro-Canada.

But such a massive sale could only be made by selling the shares at less than their real value, effectively taking money away from the public, he said.

McDougall, whose study group issued an October report on how to implement Progressive Conservative policy on the public sale of Petro-Canada, said it would cost little to distribute free shares to the public.

Assuming a share value of $10, he estimated distribution costs would be only 10 cents a share, leaving each recipient holding shares worth $9.90 each net.

To sell all or a large part of the shares, he argued, the government would have to offer a discount of up to $4 and pay 50 cents in distribution costs.

The basic choice, he said, is to give each member of the public a $10 value to hold personally or give them $5.50 each second-hand in revenue for Ottawa.

"If you're going to get your $10 back, the safest way to do it would be for you to take your share and sell it at the time you want," he said.

McDougall, who is being paid by the federal government to explain his group's report to interested groups, said earlier Tuesday in a Rotary Club speech that Petro-Canada has not been an effective instrument of public policy.

"Petro-Canada as an instrument of public policy was more appropriately an excuse by the bureaucrats for the absence of a comprehensive energy policy."

While Ottawa bureaucrats described the Calgary-based Crown corporation as a major policy instrument, he said, Petro-Canada staff in Calgary were busy full-time running an oil company.

"The public-interest mandate is a frustration rather than a challenge to the management . . . Petro-Canada is essentially a commercial operation with political clout and special privileges."

McDougall told reporters he believes Petro-Canada personnel want to become part of a private company, governed by the discipline of the private sector without the sometimes-contradictory role of serving government policy.

After privatization, he said in his speech, Petro-Canada would continue to be a major Canadian-owned presence in the oil industry.

"The Petro-Canada proposed by the task force would be stronger, more muscular, more commercially aggressive than the present one," he said.

"It would, I am told by experienced oil executives, carry on even greater activity in the frontier than that which Petro-Canada has done in the past.

"It could and should in our opinion aspire to be the No. 1 player in the Canadian petroleum industry within five years."

At his news conference, he noted that Albertans seem less concerned about future energy security than Ontario residents.

The greater Alberta confidence, he suggested, is because "you have a lot more understanding" of the situation.

He added another reason, however: "Odds are the rest of the country will freeze before you do."

PQ 'hiding studies' - Ryan

QUEBEC (UPC) — Quebec Liberal Leader Claude Ryan has fired the latest round in the referendum debate, charging the Parti Quebecois with apparently harboring secret studies because they might damage plans for independence.

Ryan produced a 125-page study in the legislature Thursday that he said proved the beneficial effect the unemployment insurance program has had on Quebec.

He said the document stated "that Quebec has a net surplus in the area of unemployment insurance of over $500 million a year" in 1976.

"The same study shows that in Ontario, they contributed $107 million more they they got from the unemployment insurance fund. These are elements that I think the people ought to know," Ryan said.

Ryan said 29 more studies ranging from tourism to agriculture had been prepared but it seemed the government wanted to keep their existence quiet because it might damage the PQ's argument for sovereignty-association.

"If the other studies are in the same vein, it's obvious that they are not serving the official thesis of the government, and they have every interest in trying to conceal such studies because they would harm rather than serve their thesis and interests."

He said the study on unemployment insurance was presented on March 15, 1978 by three civil servants.

Morin told the legislature the studies where for "negotiations" but said they were not to be made public because they were "resumes of other more elaborate work."

"They are not negotiation dossiers at all, they are factual statistical studies which are obviously of interest to all citizens," Ryan countered.

The opposition leader accused Morin of "inducing the house into error because he refused to acknowlege when he was pointedly asked, that they existed; that he had them in his files.

"And he misled the house as well when he tried to present them as studies of an entirely different nature than the one which we have found upon reading."

Ryan said Morin "didn't understand what I was talking about" when he was asked about the existence of the study last May by a parliamentary commission.

Train travel is catching on

HALIFAX (CP) — Passenger train travel is finally on the rise again, thanks in part to the energy crisis, says Via Rail president J. Frank Roberts.

Via Rail's passenger volumes have been increasing at 10 to 12 per cent each year since 1976, Roberts told a conference on tourism and the energy crisis Tuesday.

Gasoline prices and the trend to smaller, less comfortable automobiles are turning people away from long automobile trips, he said. The impact on the tourist industry is a rise in final destination trips, especially to resorts, which are already showing a revival, and an end to the short-lived era of luxurious motor homes.

Airlines will be the recipients of most of the long-distance direct-destination business, and buses will become increasingly important for short trips and for carrying tourists to remote areas, Roberts said.

But train travel will be "pivotal" in medium-distance direct trips from city to city. It may also be popular for long-distance tours.

Airlines are rapidly resigning themselves to the fact that they will be forced to abandon short-haul routes, he said. They were being edged out by energy costs and by the deregulation trend in air travel, which is causing pressure for airlines to raise their profitable long-haul rates which have been cross-subsidizing the less profitable short-haul rates.

"From sales results this year to date, we now believe that Via is by long odds the largest wholesale tour packager selling Canada as a destination," Roberts said.

"While at the beginning of the year we were optimistically forecasting a possible 50-per-cent increase in packaged tour sales, statistics now indicate that we will actually exceed 1978 levels by 200 per cent. And 1978 was a good year, with sales exceeding those of 1977 by an impressive 70 per cent."

Ever since Via was created three years ago, it has argued for "intermodality," a concept by which the best combination of modes — air, rail or bus — would be figured out.

"In other words, what we are saying is that buses meet market demands in the 0-250-mile range. Trains have a logical market in the 100-500 mile range while planes have theirs in the over-400.

Roberts also said the 10 LRC — Light, Rapid, Comfortable — trains that Via has on order from Montreal Locomotive Works and Dofasco Ltd. will not be delivered until 1981, six months to a year later than scheduled, because of strikes and other problems.

Girl moves in, MD suspended

TORONTO (CP) — A Toronto doctor's licence to practise medicine has been suspended for six months because of his relationship with a teenage girl who came to him for psychotherapy and now lives with him.

Dr. Sidney Harold Solway, an anesthetist who graduated in 1938, has been found guilty of professional misconduct by the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario.

The college said in a interim report released Tuesday that Solway began giving marital advice in 1977 to a couple and at the wife's suggestion, then began seeing the daughter who was 15 at the time.

The report said that in April, 1978, the mother told the girl she must stop seeing Solway because she was developing an emotional dependence on him. Solway had told the mother he wanted to marry the girl when she turned 18.

"In response, the daughter, who was then 16, took up residence with Dr. Solway who assisted her to move her effects in his home," the report said. "She continues to live with him."

Sedro safety eyed

OTTAWA (CP) — Public safety and potential environmental disasters are very much on the minds of Canadian officials watching the development of a United States nuclear reactor near Vancouver, External Affairs Minister Flora MacDonald said Tuesday.

She told the Commons Canadian diplomats have discussed safety procedures at the Sedro Wooley, Wash., reactor site 100 kilometres south of Vancouver with U.S. state department officials and will be kept informed on its development. (Skagit voters are against nuclear plant. Story on page 59).

A ministerial aide-memoire from the embassy in Washington said officials have especially asked about seismic activity at the proposed reactor site, safety implications arising from the fact that Vancouver is downwind from it, and the impact an accident would have on the West Coast salmon fishery.

Miss MacDonald also told Mark Rose (NDP—Mission-Port Moody) the U.S. government has postponed all licence hearings on proposed nuclear reactors.

A U.S. Embassy spokesman here said that country's Nuclear Regulatory Commission imposed a moratorium on the hearings until next spring.

The commission is investigating nuclear safety. Its freeze on hearings began shortly after the Three Mile Island incident earlier this year.

In a letter to Rose released Tuesday Miss MacDonald said Canada's "goal has always been to ensure that this project conforms to the highest possible standards in design and operation and presents no serious risk to the health and safety of Canadians."

If the planned reactor presents "any significant risk of injury to Canada we would want to enter into discussion directly with the government of the United States," she wrote.

WASHINGTON — Rosalynn Carter left for Thailand today after cancelling plans to fly to Ottawa with her husband.

The president's wife will visit camps holding refugees fleeing from Cambodia.

"I want to go to see what our whole country can do to help," Mrs. Carter said.

Mrs. Carter's decision to go to Thailand has upset plans for a formal Ottawa luncheon with 24 prominent women.

But Maureen McTeer, Prime Minister Clark's wife, told the U.S. president's wife in a telegram Tuesday she is proud Mrs. Carter will be leading the important delegation to Cambodian refugee camps in Thailand.

President Carter's daughter Amy is still coming and the president's mother, Miss Lillian, will replace Rosalynn.

An official in the prime minister's office said the Friday luncheon was cancelled after Clark was told late Monday that Rosalynn wasn't coming.

The official would not release the names of the prominent women invited to the lunch.

N-plant device found

MONTREAL (CP) — RCMP in Saint John, N.B., believe a radioactive testing device recovered there Tuesday — after it had been missing for more than a month — was simply mislaid in transit.

In a telephone interview, RCMP Constable Bill Skead said the device, intended for shipment to a nuclear power plant under construction at Point Lepreau, N.B., was found in a large warehouse where shipments destined for a strike-bound paper mill had been diverted.

Unions yank millions in Commerce protest

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two more unions plan to withdraw millions of dollars in deposits from the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce to protest the bank's stance on union workers, a spokesman for the British Columbia Government Employees Union said Tuesday.

Union spokesman Robbie Robinson said the two unidentified unions, one based in Toronto, plan to withdraw an estimated $40 million from the bank within 10 days.

In Toronto, Canadian Labor Congress president Dennis McDermott said Tuesday the Commerce will lose more than $100 million in deposits and annual cash flow unless it signs union contracts in nine of its branches.

He said a boycott of the bank by union affiliates is under way. The B.C. Government Employees' Union is withdrawing a $6-million deposit, the Ontario Public Service Employees' Union is transferring its $10-million-a-year account to another bank and the United Steelworkers union is transferring $20 million in annual cash flow.

"This is gentle pressure so far, but we're letting them know we have the capability to move hundreds of millions if necessary," McDermott said. "We won't do business with people in the business of cutting our throats."

The congress, co-ordinating a campaign to organize 7,500 bank branches across Canada, has said the Commerce is the toughest bank to bargain with.

"They are the number one violator of the labor code, with three convictions already," said Laraine Singler, director of the bank workers' organizing committee. "All the banks fight hard, but the others generally stay within the law."

Everett McCrimmon, a Commerce spokesman, said the bank is disappointed by the boycott action "but we have been negotiating in good faith and are still prepared to negotiate."

The unions are focussing on the Commerce, Ms. Singler said, because it refuses to grant union security in the form of compulsory dues checkoff.

McDermott says the unions have chosen the boycott as their main pressure tactic because strikes wouldn't bother the banks.

"The way to a banker's heart is through his pocketbook," he said. "And that's the route we're taking."

Press group protests rates

OTTAWA (CP) — Any subsidies given to newspapers in the form of lower postal rates should be considered as benefits to subscribers and not to publishers, says the Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association.

In a brief presented Tuesday to Postmaster-General John Fraser, the association said the postal classification of newspapers as second-class material was always considered as a subsidy to readers until the former Liberal government introduced a bill last year dealing with postal rates.

It is expected to be reintroduced by the Progressive Conservative government.

The Liberal bill would have forced publishers of newspapers, magazines and other written material to apply to the secretary of state for low postal rates and to say why they are entitled to special treatment.

This, said the publishers' brief, transferred any subsidy from readers to publishers and as such constituted a potential threat to freedom of the press.

FLQ's Lanctot pleads guilty

MONTREAL (CP) — Jacques Lanctot pleaded guilty today to charges stemming from the 1970 kidnapping of British diplomat James Cross.

Lanctot had originally entered a not guilty plea to charges of conspiracy, kidnapping, forcible detention and extortion in the abduction of Cross, but in an expected move, reversed his plea before Chief Judge Yves Mayrand of sessions court.

The 33-year-old former member of the terrorist Front de Liberation du Quebec returned to Canada last January after more than eight years of self-imposed exile in Cuba and France, following in the footsteps of his sister Louise and her husband Jacques Cossette-Trudel, who had returned a month earlier.

The Cossette-Trudels were sentenced Aug. 7 to two years less a day for their part in the Cross kidnapping.

They had both pleaded guilty to charges of conspiracy to kidnap, kidnapping and forcible detention, and were found guilty on a fourth charge of extortion in connection with the Cross abduction.

The former British trade commissioner here was abducted from his downtown home Oct. 5, 1970, and released unharmed 59 days later in exchange for free passage to Cuba for his kidnappers.

Cross' kidnapping and the subsequent abduction at gunpoint of provincial labor minister Pierre Laporte sparked the October Crisis and led to the imposition of the War Measures Act.

In September, Lanctot dropped an appeal of a Quebec Superior court jurisdictional ruling to speed up legal proceedings.

IUD, rhythm found riskier than pill

NEW YORK (AP) — Women who use the IUD or rhythm methods of birth control seem to run a slightly higher risk of having unhealthy babies when they do get pregnant, a new study concludes.

But, in a result the head of the study called "puzzling," prior use of the contraceptive pill seems to slightly decrease the risk of infant death.

The findings are part of a four-year study of factors affecting the outcome of pregnancy directed by Dr. George Tokuhata, an epidemiologist at the University of Pittsburgh and head of Pennsylvania's state Bureau of Health Research.

Tokuhata presented his preliminary results at the annual meeting of the American Public Health Association Tuesday. More than 12,000 health professionals are attending the five-day meeting, which ends Thursday.

But Dr. Jean Pakter, chief of maternity services for the New York City health department and chairman of the session at which Tokuhata appeared, urged caution in interpreting the study.

"These are only associations, not causes and effects," she said.

Tokuhata and his colleagues interviewed 13,050 women who gave birth at five hospitals in the Harrisburg, Pa., area from 1974 to 1978. They collected hospital records and birth and death certificates for the births. The study examined whether any of 279 variables affected the outcome of a pregnancy, ranging from the mother's health history to her family income.

They found that women who had previously used the IUD, or intrauterine device, had about a two-percent excess of subsequent infant deaths, premature babies and babies of low birth weight compared with women who used no contraceptives, all other factors being equal.

Mothers who used the rhythm method favored by the Roman Catholic Church had a similar excess of infants born dead or of low weight, he said. But pill users had about a one-per-cent lower chance of having an infant born dead.

Low birth weight was defined as less than 5½ pounds. No distinction was made between women who got pregnant by choice and those whose birth control failed.

Tokuhata said it was possible the problems associated with the IUD may be due to damage to the lining of the uterus, which is in contact with the device. The IUD is a plastic coil fitted in the uterus.

As for the rhythm method, in which couples simply abstain from sex during that time of the menstrual cycle when a woman is fertile, Tokuhata said problems there might arise from a greater likelihood that the egg was fertilized by an "aged" sperm.

But he said he could not explain the result for the pill.

The diaphragm, prophylactics and other forms of contraception seemed to have no effect on pregnancy in the study, he said.

Trust servants to spend - MP

OTTAWA (CP) — The government could save money occasionally if public servants were given a freer rein in spending, a Progressive Conservative MP said.

Fred King, rookie MP for the B.C. riding of Okanagan-Similkameen and a 30-year veteran of the public service, made the novel suggestion at a Commons committee studying the expenditures of the supply and services department.

Requiring public servants to delay purchasing goods until permission is granted sometimes results in the price increasing, King said.

"We're suffering a drop in employee morale. They're saying, 'What the hell, nobody trusts me, nobody cares about money.'"

Roch LaSalle, supply and services minister, said he would study King's suggestion that government employees be allowed to spend more than $150 without obtaining permission.

To back his argument, King cited a recent case of a government research station in British Columbia.

The station needed bales of hay and could have acquired the necessary amount at $3.50 a bale but by the time permission was granted the price escalated to $4.50.

CITY WATCHDOG RICHARDS Report # 136. Many thanks to all those Victoria residents who have been telephoning Your City's Watchdog with information regarding City Matters. Congratulations go to Alderman Robert Wright, after returning from holidays, when he was informed about the additional proposed cost of $62.50 for collecting garbage which was to be assessed next year on Victoria taxpaying homeowners, that he would not be in favour of this assessment. If you wish further information regarding city matters, please continue to phone 383-6259 Your City's Watchdog, C. Joe Richards or write PO Box 154. Postscript: Your City's Watchdog will be an invited guest on C.J.V.I. Joe Easingwood's talk show on Thursday November 8th between 1 and 2pm and will be commenting on why only two aldermen residing outside of the Victoria Municipality should be elected to Victoria's City Council for the years 1980 and 1981. Please listen or phone in your questions tomorrow afternoon.

TO EARLE ERICKSON:
"Take notice that a hearing will take place at Provincial Court (Family Division) at 2020 Cameron Street, Victoria, B.C., on Thursday the 15th day of November, 1979 at 9:30 o'clock a.m. To review the temporary wardship of the Superintendent of Child Welfare of your children: Bradley Richard Thomas — b. 17.02.76 and Eric Walter Thomas — b. 22.09.68. At this hearing, the Superintendent will be recommending that the children be committed permanently to his care and custody. Would you please contact your nearest Ministry of Human Resources office for further information or contact Kathryn Hall at 760 Hillside Ave., Victoria, 387-5356."

TO GEORGE GIBBS:
"Take notice that hearing will take place at the Provincial Court, Family Division at 2020 Cameron St., Victoria, B.C. on Thursday, November 15, 1979 at 9:30 a.m. The purpose of this hearing will be application for the temporary wardship of the Superintendent of child Welfare of your children: Dwayne Derek Thomas — b. 23.10.70, Gail Marlene Thomas — b. 04.10.71, and Joyce Debbie Thomas — b. 02.03.79. Would you please contact the nearest Ministry of Human Resources office for further information or contact Kathleen Hall at 760 Hillside Avenue, Victoria, B.C. 387-5356."

Firefighters step up effort after more tanker blasts

GALVESTON, Texas (UPI) — Faced with more oil-fired explosions and increasing pollution off the Texas coast, marine firefighters today began working around the clock to extinguish a seven-day blaze on the tanker Burmah Agate.

Three more explosions shook the grounded, burning tanker late Tuesday, rupturing at least three tanks and dumping more oil into the Gulf of Mexico.

Firefighting tugboats were forced to pull away from the volatile ship, but Coast Guard officer Richard Griggs said they returned at midnight Tuesday to begin continual firefighting efforts.

The Coast Guard said it might be days before the fire aboard the 772-foot tanker was extinguished and the flow of oil toward resort beaches stopped.

"The application of foam this afternoon (Tuesday) was able to significantly reduce the amount of fire on board the ship but when they (two tugboats) ran out of foam and had to back off, the fire reflashed and now, for the present, it's worse than it was this afternoon when they began putting foam on it," said Griggs. "There were three more explosions."

Griggs said at least six tanks aboard the ship were damaged, contributing to the flow of oil that fueled the fire and fouled more than 100 miles of beaches from Galveston Island southward.

Additional cleanup contract equipment was to arrive early today, including several thousand feet of oil containment boom, and officials were hoping a cold front would continue to help push spilled oil from the 16.8-million-gallon capacity tanker away from the coast.

The inbound tanker collided before dawn Nov. 1 with the outbound freighter Mimosa near the mouth of Galveston Bay.

Two bodies were found on Galveston beaches Tuesday and Griggs said they were presumed to be crewmen from the tanker. Thirty-two persons were killed and 13 bodies have been recovered.

Weather and ocean current experts employed by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration said beaches from Galveston to Matagorda Bay had been hit by the oil. An intermittent stream of oil extended from the tanker for about 20 miles, Griggs said, and remained about 6-7 miles offshore.

NOAA consultant Larry Thebeau said winds and currents so far had kept oil from the wreck, grounded six miles south of Galveston, out of the mouth of environmentally sensitive Galveston Bay and the Houston Ship Channel.

He said that, based on past weather records, there was "only a 6 per cent chance" of winds directly out of the south forcing oil into Galveston Bay. But the Coast Guard strung two short environmental defence booms near the bay entrance and prepared other protective measures all along the coast.

The exact amount on the beaches was undetermined, but there had been at least four impact areas covering a total of several miles of beach. Officials Friday estimated 84,000 gallons had been spilled in the wreck but refused to speculate on the total spill.

Griggs said there were no reports any wildlife had been affected by the spill. He has requested that the public make any reports of oiled birds to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in Galveston.

Another guard killed by IRA

BELFAST (UPI) — A 20-year-old, off-duty prison guard was shot to death today near the spot where three other prison officers have been killed by the provisional Irish Republican Army in recent weeks.

The latest killing came just 24 hours after the IRA reiterated it considered prison guards legitimate assassination targets because they are "part of the British war machine in Northern Ireland."

In the past three weeks, four prison officers have been shot dead as they went to or from work at the heavily guarded jail a half-mile northwest of Belfast's city centre.

The deaths bring to 14 the number of prison officers killed in recent years by the IRA.

Rich women shot

LONDON (AP) — Two wealthy, attractive, 39-year-old women were murdered by shotgun blasts as they lay bound, gagged and naked in separate beds in a quiet English country mansion, police said.

Detective Superintendent Tom Brooks, leading 100 policemen in the inquiry, said no motive was apparent. The victims were discovered by a relative late Monday in a 16th-century house near Congleton in Cheshire County.

Ann Carryer, mother of two, and Elizabeth Christine Blood, mother of three, drove separately to the house to sort possessions left by Mrs. Carryer's mother who died recently. Police said the house where they were found was filled with valuable antiques. They theorized the two women either disturbed thieves already there or opened the door to them.

Brooks said there was no apparent sexual attack and no evidence that anything was stolen.

309 IN MEMORIAM

ROBBIE - John Alexander, in loving memory of Dad, passed away November 7, 1978.
His memory is as dear today,
As in the hour he passed away.
Doreen and Roy, John and Jan, Dave and Judy, Helen, Bob and Shirley, Lloyd and Margo and Phil and Pat.

STANCIL - In fondest memory of Robert A. Stancil (Bob) who passed away Nov. 7, 1971.
We do not forget you, nor do we intend,
We think of you often, and will to the end;
Gone and forgotten by some you may be,
But dear to our memory you ever will be.
Remembered always Jerry & Eleonor Fowler and family.

STANCIL - In loving memory of a dear brother-in-law and uncle, who passed away Nov. 7, 1971.
One long lasting memory of a brother-in-law so dear,
Will live on forever;
For he is still very near.
The gates of memory, will never close,
We miss you Bob, more than anyone knows.
Remembered with love always,
Your sister-in-laws Dorothy Grexton, Mabel Stenseth and families.

STANCIL - In cherished and loving memory of husband and father, Mr. Robert A. Stancil, who entered into Eternal rest Nov. 7, 1971.
There is no parting from those we love,
No distance can divide.
For each day in memory's garden,
We still walk side by side.
Wherever life may take us,
Whatever we may do,
The memory of the years we shared,
Will keep us close to you.
He has not gone, our dear beloved,
Nor has he wandered far,
Just stepped into God's loveliest rooms,
And left the door ajar.
Lovingly remembered always,
Your wife Lillian and daughter Barbara.

309 IN MEMORIAM

THEY SHALL GROW NOT OLD AS WE WHO ARE LEFT GROW OLD, AGE SHALL NOT WEARY THEM, NOR THE YEARS CONDEMN, AT THE GOING DOWN OF THE SUN, AND IN THE MORNING, WE WILL REMEMBER THEM.

The Tariff Board / La Commission Du Tarif
CANADA

NOTICE OF HEARING
THE TARIFF BOARD
REFERENCE NO. 157 — TARIFF ITEMS COVERING GOODS MADE/NOT MADE IN CANADA

The Government of Canada, as a result of the Tokyo Round Trade Negotiations has, through the Minister of Finance, directed The Tariff Board to consider alternatives to the present tariff system of classifying goods according to whether or not they are made in Canada. The Board will hold a preliminary hearing at 10:00 a.m. on January 16, 1980, in the Sussex Room of the Canadian Government Conference Centre, 2 Rideau Street, Ottawa, to consider in a general manner only the underlying issues, the various options, and the approach to be adopted. Hearings dealing with individual tariff items and specific goods will be scheduled at a later date.

The Board will consider the matter in two phases, with the following groups of "Made/Not Made" items at issue in Phase I:

Group 1: Machinery and Equipment for Use in the Exploration, Handling or Primary Processing of Natural Resources
41001-1 41002-1 Ex.41012-1 41013-1

It's been a decade of doom for Dominica

By DAVID BELNAP
Los Angeles Times

LA PAZ — If prizes were awarded to countries in trouble, Wolsey P. Louis of Dominica thinks his little Caribbean island republic would be in the running for first place.

Louis, who is the permanent secretary of Dominica's Ministry of External Affairs, ticked off a litany of disasters in an address at the General Assembly here of the Organization of American States.

He told of crops failing, exports drying up, industries closing, bloody demonstrations, strikes, a political crisis. Then, as if all this were not enough, Hurricane David hit Dominica last August with devastating force.

According to Louis, about the only bright spot in a decade of gloom for Dominica came on Nov. 3, 1978, when the island became independent of Britain.

As a brand new member of the OAS, which seeks to promote peace and development in the Western Hemisphere, Dominica would welcome virtually any kind of help, but Louis made it clear that his country would "strive to maintain and preserve our newly gained independence."

Dominica, 290 square miles in size, is a link in the Windward Island chain in the eastern Caribbean. It is truly a banana republic, for the export of bananas, along with coconuts and citrus fruit, underpins the livelihood of its 80,000 people

Declining banana production in the early years of the decade had already helped cause a 12 per cent drop in gross national product when the oil crisis came along in 1974. Agriculture exports fell by 15 per cent as petroleum costs pushed farm production expenses above prices.

The island's pumice and timber industries closed in 1975, bringing manufacturing to a standstill, and tourism fell off because of the world recession and bad publicity.

By the end of 1977, conditions were even worse, aggravated by a long civil-service strike that paralyzed the economy and for a time severed the island's air and sea links with the rest of the world. It cost more than a quarter of the government's total yearly income to settle the strike.

Leaf-spot disease struck the banana industry in 1978 and more than 4,000 acres of bananas had to be destroyed to control its spread.

"The leaf-spot disaster was hardly over when the people of Dominica embarked on a democratic struggle to replace . . . a government considered high-handed and dictatorial," Louis said. "There was a high economic price to pay for the 24 days the struggle lasted."

The struggle began last May with a demonstration outside Parliament protesting proposed legislation that would have curtailed freedom of the press and the right to strike. When security forces opened fire, three of the demonstrators were killed.

A general strike followed, interrupting public services. Not long afterward, Prime Minister Patrick John was replaced by Oliver Seraphine.

Before the tiny country had recovered from what Louis described as "the shock and rigors" of the government change, Hurricane David, the worst in 100 years, hit with its winds of 175 mph.

"In the commonwealth of Dominica after Aug. 29, 1979, there are virtually no coconuts, no bananas, hardly any citrus and root crops," Louis said.

"David blew away and washed away our already weak infrastructure. Our port facilities are nearly destroyed. We have no hydroelectricity and hardly any other electricity and no internal telephone communications to boast of.

"Villages are inaccessible by telephone, several of our main roads and agriculture feeder roads have been severely damaged or washed away, nearly every school and other government building has been structurally damaged or destroyed.

"Some 60,000 of our 80,000 population were left homeless except for temporary, improvised shelter which is not necessarily structurally sound or even healthy. The other homeless live in tents and public buildings which were not blown away or too badly damaged. Our already high incidence of joblessness is phenomenally aggravated."

Louis expressed thanks to the OAS members for the aid they provided following the hurricane. And he made what he called "a special appeal, in the language of the heart, for (additional) over-all assistance in this our hour of suffering and need."

He said Dominica needs $13 million for health services alone, including hospital reconstruction, equipment, drugs and repairs to water and sanitary systems.

Greenhouses: caution urged

A cold greenhouse is a commercial term for an unheated greenhouse. The home gardener feels this is an unfriendly designation though it helps to know the term when reading catalogues and greenhouse books.

Much can be grown in an unheated structure if the idea is approached on a small acale for the first year or two.

This caution is suggested to give the gardener the feel of the house at different seasons, particularly in winter.

A thermometer which registers lowest temperatures during the night and highest during the day while the owner is not around, is perhaps one of the most valuable aids to success. These maximum-minimum thermometers are not cheap, but the cost is soon recovered, either in vegetables grown through winter and earliest spring or in the equally valuable beauty of hardy small plants blooming during the same period.

If a solidly built wood potting shed forms the north or north-east wall of the structure, there is a measure of protection in winter as well as a comfortable place to work at any season.

Further inside insulation can be added on the inside wood wall in the form of sheets of brown cardboard from large cartons which are usually burned in incinerators at food stores. They are no doubt available by arrangement with the stock department.

A cold greenhouse can also be made a little more habitable for plants and the humans who work with them, by having a two to three-foot wooden section set on the concrete foundation on the two long sides. Glass from there up to the eaves gives plentiful light. This leaves one short side with glass down to the foundation.

If the end faces south with no near obstruction to the low winter sunshine, there is valuable place in a ground bed for broad beans or a couple of dozen early type green peas.

Which brings us to soil in the greenhouse.

Only the portion of ground bed to be used for planting will need conditioning. The rest should be packed smooth and covered with large grain sand for clean footage and placing of flats and pots.

Just as outdoors, dig and turn over the soil area to be planted, to aid perfect drainage. Add old composted material, seaweed, very old cow manure. No peatmoss until it is decided whether plants to be grown require an acid-type soil.

Benches of comfortable height bring plants nearer to the roof glass light. Containers of plants are easily movable to different light and warmth conditions as seasons progress.

In time it is possible to construct superstructures of slatted wood supports to hold other smaller containers of plants, seeds, seedlings and rooting cuttings.

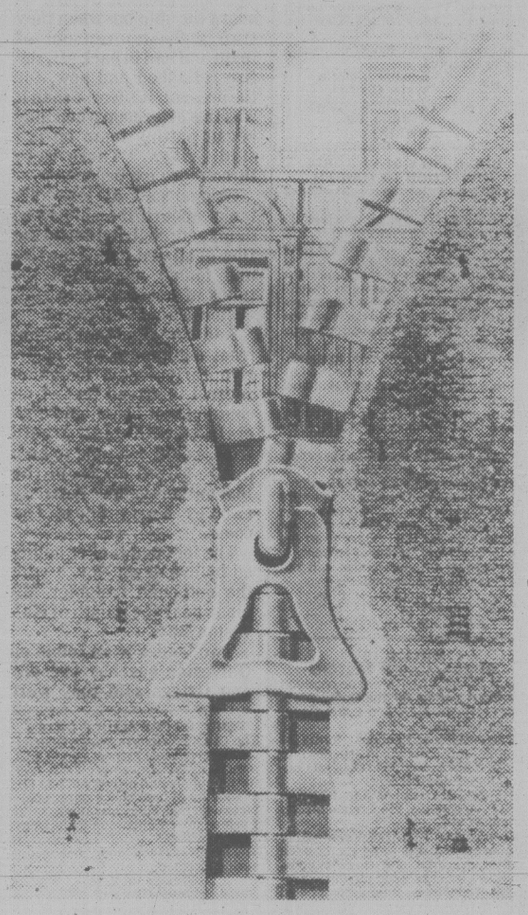
Before these grand ideas can be put into operation it is necessary to know what the climate will be inside the unheated greenhouse. Time will tell, with the aid of the maximum-minimum thermometer. From those readings can be judged whether plants considered desirable will tolerate the lows and the highs registered.

Ventilation is as necessary in an unheated structure as in a heated, especially in winter. Before thinking this is silly, remember the warmth in an unheated glassed-in porch on a sunny winter's day, when snow and ice (even here sometimes) is on the ground.

The living plants and damp soil will be giving off moisture which condenses on the glass. The air becomes saturated; it cools rapidly at sundown, leaving the greenhouse interior temperature subject to a sudden plunge—still loaded with free moisture which induces rot among plants in growth.

So we keep the air moving inside, even as we need fresh outdoor air to circulate in out homes during sunny days in winter. Fresh air is more easily heated than stale, moisture-saturated air.

Things to consider and use to advantage, these ideas are offered in the hope that owners of unheated greenhouses will reach their individual goals — in time.



ART FOR INSULATION'S SAKE? It may look like some inventive type's latest solution to home-heating cost squeeze, but huge zipper is not — as it seems at a glance — fastening a weatherproof jacket on building. Instead it is focus of eye-catching painting on huge firewall in Charlottenburg district of Berlin.

Eskimo lawyers to fight Beaufort Sea oil leases

WASHINGTON (AP) — Conservationists, encouraged by a U.S. Supreme Court decision halting sales of oil leases in the North Atlantic, are moving to block the next big lease sale — of 500,000 acres in the waters off Alaska's North Slope.

Lawyers for the Alaska Eskimos that populate the Arctic tundra say the lawsuits are being drafted now, leaving only questions of where and when they'll be filed and how many groups will participate in the action.

Environmental groups said they are watching the situation and may be involved themselves in the effort to stop the lease sale, which is scheduled for Dec. 11.

On that date, the U.S. interior department plans to open bids from oil companies seeking to drill for oil and gas in the icy waters of the Beaufort Sea.

Geologists say the lease area, covering 514,202 acres, may contain up to 1.25 billion barrels of oil and 3.125 trillion cubic feet of natural gas. Supporters of the sale say that would make it the biggest oil bonanza since Prudhoe Bay.

But environmentalists are concerned that such drilling might destroy the endangered bowhead whale and other marine species in the area. Eskimos living on the North Slope say an oil spill might destroy their food supply and their way of life.

Their hopes were given at least moral encouragement Tuesday when Supreme Court Justice William Brennan temporarily blocked the sale of drilling leases in the North Atlantic near the rich fishing grounds of the Georges Banks.

Brennan gave at least temporary life to an appeal by state officials who are challenging the Georges Bank sale on environmental grounds.

"There are going to be some suits on the Beaufort Sea, undoubtedly," said Craig Van Note, executive vice-president of Monitor, a Washington-based consortium of 35 conservationist groups.

He said Brennan's decision was "extremely encouraging, to say the least."

Ed Comer, a Washington lawyer representing the North Slope Borough, the local government unit in that area of Alaska, said the borough definitely plans court action.

"The native Alaskans are very heavily opposed," said Comer. He said the local economy is still based principally on subsistence hunting and the natives are concerned that a single oil spill "would be disastrous for the marine life."

SAS jets grounded

STOCKHOLM (Reuter) — Scandinavian Airlines has grounded three DC-9 jetliners because of cracks in the bulkhead over the rear door, an SAS spokesman said today.

The airline has been checking its entire fleet of 60 DC-9's since an Air Canada plane of the same type lost its tail cone during a flight out of Boston.

Small stress cracks were found in 14 other SAS DC-9s.

Military might marks Russian anniversary

MOSCOW (AP) — Tanks, rockets, missiles and thousands of Red Army soldiers rumbled through snow-whipped Red Square today to mark the 62nd anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution. Defence Minister Dmitri Ustinov said Soviet armed forces will defend "peace and socialism."

Strong winds whirled the snow through the square and against the red brick Kremlin walls, as Soviet leaders reviewed the parade from Lenin's mausoleum. President Leonid Brezhnev, 72, wearing an overcoat and lambswool hat, returned the soldiers' salute and stayed until the end of the parade.

Absent from the reviewing stand was Premier Alexei Kosygin, 75, who has not been seen in public since Oct. 17. Western diplomats believe he is ill.

Thousands of soldiers and sailors, including crack units of marines, airborne commandos and border soldiers, marched snappily through the square in a temperature of two below Celsius. The snow, described by a radio commentator-as a "blizzard," made visibility difficult.

The military parade featured T-72 medium tanks, the latest Soviet model, last seen in the 1977 parade. Also shown were armored infantry fighting vehicles that can be dropped from the air, self-propelled and towed howitzers, and surface-to-air and ground-to-ground missiles.

Soviet commentators were brief in describing the equipment. As surface-to-surface rockets rolled past at about 15 kilometes an hour, a radio announcer said "bigger and bigger missiles" were passing by the reviewing stand, including theatre weapons "capable of quickly accomplishing combat missions."

No new military equipment appeared to be on display this year.

Ustinov, 71, said in a speech opening the parade that "our party and state — at one with the fraternal parties and states of the socialist community— consistently pursue the policy of peace and peaceful coexistence, the curbing of the arms race and the slackening of military opposition between socialist and capitalist states."

Mom's bite frees child from tiger

KUWAIT (UPI) — A Kuwaiti mother freed her daughter from a tiger's claws in Amriyah Zoo by biting his paw, the Kuwaiti newspaper Al Qabas reported Tuesday.

Seven-year-old Souad Saleh, charmed by the tiger's hypnotic eyes, moved close to his cage and offered him some sweets.

The tiger, equally charmed by the little girl, stuck his paw between the bars and trapped her head against his cage.

While Souad screamed from pain and fright, her parents tried to beat the animal back by pounding his paw with a stone.

Finally, out of desperation, Souad's mother sunk her teeth deep into the tiger's paw. The big cat quickly released the child, but not before ripping off two of her earrings and some tufts of hair.

1,700 species miss shield

New York Times

WASHINGTON — To the dismay and anger of environmentalists, about 1,700 plants and a hundred animals are being dropped from consideration for protection on the endangered species list because a deadline Congress set a year ago for Interior Department action is about to pass.

Department officials say that, under last year's amendments to the Endangered Species Act, they have no choice other than to delete plants and animals that were proposed for protection two years or more before enactment of the amendments.

But concerned environmentalists, warning that many of these species may now face extinction, charge that bureaucratic slowness and ineptitude are the reasons the plants and animals are losing any chance of protection.

There are no household names among the plants and animals the Interior Department's Fish and Wildlife Service is planning to drop Monday. The plants include such species as the tiburor mariposa lily and the Florida yew. The animals, except for the black toad, are all invertebrates such as the Madison cave isopod, a kind of fresh water shrimp.

Of the nearly 2,000 species that had been proposed for protection, the Endangered Species Office at the Interior Department has got around to listing only 37 in the intervening year.

Final solution, all right!

COLOGNE (Reuter) — Fomer Nazi police chief Herbert Martin Hagen, on trial for war crimes against Jews, said Tuesday he thought Hitler's "final solution" meant the establishment of a Jewish state.

Hagen, a security police department chief in Nazi-occupied Paris, told the court he had never really considered what so-called work awaited the deported French Jews when their journeys ended in Eastern Europe.

Asked by the judge what he imagined Hitler had meant when he called for a final solution to the Jewish question, Hagen replied, "I always assumed it was the establishment of a Jewish state."

For six million Jews, Hitler's final solution meant death.

Hagen and co-defendants Kurt Lischka and Ernst Heinrichsohn are on trial for their roles in sending 73,000 Jews and Communists from France to German concentration camps where nearly half of them died in gas chambers.

Freighter loss fuels nuke fears

LONDON (Reuter) — Greenpeace, the Vancouver-based environmental group, said Tuesday the loss off southern England of the British freighter Pool Fisher underlined its fears about the increasing movement of spent nuclear fuel by sea.

It said in a statement a major marine disaster had been averted only because the freighter had changed its usual cargo of spent nuclear fuel to harmless potash.

Some day a vast area would be contaminated by the release of radioactivity after an accident to such a ship, Greenpeace warned.

Greenpeace director Peter Wilkinson said the incident showed the nuclear industry's lack of concern for public safety.

Skagit voters swat N-plant

MOUNT VERNON, Wash. (AP) — Demonstrating at the voting booth instead of in the streets, Skagit County residents voted overwhelmingly against a proposed twin nuclear plant on the Skagit River.

County commissioners, who put the non-binding measure on the ballot Tuesday, will have to decide the future of the plant, proposed by Washington's largest private utility.

Members of Citizens for a Vote, which spearheaded the advisory vote against the plant, celebrated their victory into the wee hours today.

With results counted from 100 of Skagit County's 102 precincts, the vote was 15,775 against the plants to 6,245 in favor.

The opposition vote means "the county commissioners . . . will see what the people wish — and that is not to have a nuclear plant in Skagit County," said Jones Atterberry, office manager of Citizens for a Vote.

Puget Sound Power and Light Co. says the plants are needed to meet growing energy needs. The utility's representatives said the lopsided vote was not unexpected.

"It's not going very good," said Jerry Kaufman, Puget Power's manager in Mount Vernon and a member of Neighbors for Protecting Tomorrow, which fought Skagit County's Proposition 4.

"Basically, it's a response to the Three Mile Island thing. There is still a power shortage . . . and it is not going to go away no matter how much we put our head in the sand."

A company statement said that while it planned to proceed with plans for the power plants, "we will try to meet the expressed interests of the citizens of Skagit County as well as our total customer group in the Puget Sound area."

Atterberry said both Democrats and Republicans worked to get 3,200 persons added to the county voter rolls in an effort to show the county's feelings on the power plants.

The advisory vote was put on the general election ballot Oct. 1 by the county commissioners, after prodding from many residents. It has been five years since Puget Power began the process to build the power plants, and the proposal has met with increased community resistance and various delays due to prolonged hearings and challenges.

Puget Power tried unsuccessfully to get a court order against the advisory issue, with company President John Ellis saying the election would "irreparably harm" the company because county commissioners are considering extension or renewal of a zoning permit.

The permit, issued five years ago, expires Dec. 31.

Kucinich out; Wash. voters back taxes lid

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — Dennis Kucinich is out as mayor of Cleveland after two years of battling the city's bankers and his own party establishment. But Democrats retained control of other big-city governments in U.S. elections and withstood spirited statehouse challenges in Mississippi and Kentucky.

Kucinich, who had survived last year's recall vote and two defaults on the city's debts, lost decisively to George Voinovich, Ohio's Republican lieutenant-governor.

The final tally gave Voinovich 94,407 to 73,505 for Kucinich, who told his subdued supporters, "We stood up for the people against the corporations that are attacking the consumers every day."

Democrat Kevin White won an unprecedented fourth straight four-year term as Boston mayor. And in Philadelphia, William Green, a former Democratic U.S. representative, will succeed law-and-order Mayor Frank Rizzo.

San Francisco Mayor Dianne Feinstein, appointed after Mayor George Moscone was slain last year, apparently faced a Dec. 11 runoff with second-place finisher Quentin Kopp, a city supervisor.

Runoff votes are necessary if no candidate wins 50 per cent of the vote. The top two vote-getters qualify.

Meanwhile, Washington state Tuesday hopped aboard the tax limitation bandwagon, but refused to join the trend toward deposits on beer and soft drink containers.

The most popular ballot proposition was Initiative 62, which will forbid legislators to boost taxes any faster than the growth in statewide personal income.

It applies to the sales, business and occupation and state property taxes, but not to local property taxes, gas taxes, college tuition or other state licences and fees.

Taxes won't be cut. The measure is simply a hedge against unbridled increases. The measure would permit the legislature to spend about $110 million extra this biennium. Legislative leaders say that won't happen.

A bottle bill, which would have imposed a nickel deposit on all beer and soft drink containers, sank after a million-dollar blitz by opponents.

And California voters, in their first special election in six years, Tuesday overwhelmingly spoke out in favor of a mandatory limit on government spending and equally strongly against court-ordered school busing.

Lung cancer rate rises for women smokers

NEW YORK (AP) — Women who smoke are getting older, and their lungs reflect the damage, the American Cancer Society reports. Lung cancer, ranked eighth among cancer deaths in women in 1961, now ranks as the No. 2 cancer killer among U.S. females.

"Women didn't begin smoking in earnest until much later than men, but now their lung cancer statistics are matching the earlier rise among males," Lawrence Garfinkel, society vice-president, said Tuesday.

More than 100,000 Americans have lung cancer, the society said. Smoking is responsible for 83 per cent of the cases in men and about 43 per cent in women, it reported. In 1980, 117,000 U.S. residents will be struck by the disease, it added.

Lung cancer, which ranked eighth as a cause of female cancer death in 1961, will kill an estimated 26,000 women in 1980. And another 32,000 new cases will be diagnosed next year, the society said.

The new information, contained in the society's annual publication, Cancer Facts and Figures, also showed that the survival rate for all stages of lung cancer is low: eight per cent for men and 12 per cent for women.

Mandel denied appeal

BALTIMORE (UPI) — Former Maryland Gov. Marvin Mandel's request for another appeal of his political corruption conviction was denied Tuesday, but he said he will appeal to the Supreme Court.

The 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, in Richmond, Va., rejected, 4-3, Mandel's request for a rehearing of an earlier decision reinstating the mail fraud and racketeering convictions against him and five codefendants.

That 3-3 vote last July 20 overturned a January appeals ruling that vacated Mandel's conviction.

SNUG BUG lies almost buried under blanket of leaves in 1300-block Hampshire in Oak Bay. Auto has been left unattended on road for some time, if tickets on windshield mean anything. Owner of elderly Volkswagen is obviously fall guy who simply wants himself and his car to be leaved alone.

Bennett backs Alberta stand

EDMONTON (CP) — Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed will not negotiate a new oil pricing agreement with consuming provinces at a first ministers' energy meeting in Ottawa next Monday and Tuesday.

Lougheed told reporters he is not optimistic there will be a quick agreement on a national energy package despite Prime Minister Clark's suggestions an agreement may be within several days.

The Alberta government welcomes the discussions because they might clarify the issues for Canadians in other provinces, he said outside the legislature.

The premier's insistence that only Ottawa and Alberta can negotiate an energy deal formed an essential part of his speech in Vancouver last week. He said then that either the federal and Alberta governments will negotiate an energy agreement bilaterally or Alberta will set the price of oil on its own once the current pricing agreement expires June 30, 1980.

In Victoria, Premier Bill Bennett reiterated B.C.'s basic agreement with Lougheed's position.

The resources belong to the provinces and they "should be able to get value for their products," he told a news conference.

He compared the current Alberta oil issue with B.C.'s rich lumber industry.

B.C. forest companies sell their products at world prices and this enables them to pay good wages to their employees, make healthy profits and modernize their equipment, he said.

It also enables the government to cream off sizeable revenues which help pay for social programs and health care.

If the federal government unilaterally said those lumber products were to be sold at half price, the social programs would suffer as would the forest industry workers and their employers, Bennett added.

The premier said their is "an economic shift" taking place in Canada because of the energy needs.

In a veiled reference to Ontario industries, he said people and businesses are going to have to move west, closer to the energy supplies.

"It is consistent with the growth of the country to have people and business move to where the energy and opportunities are.

"It is foolish to always look to the status quo.

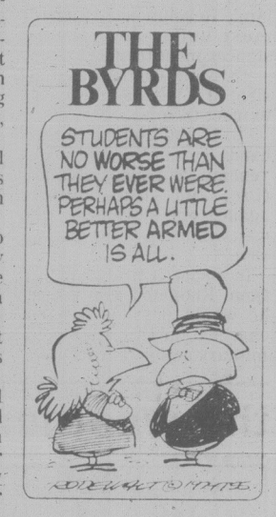
Lougheed answered Alberta Opposition Leader Bob Clark in the legislature Tuesday with one of his strongest statements yet on the state of energy talks.

"I believe I can assure the honorable members of the legislative assembly that there is no agreement with regard to a national energy package . . . that is even close . . . And although I can say negotiations are under way, I am not at all optimistic about it."

Lougheed later told an impromptu news conference he hopes his assessment of the state of talks is wrong and the province and the federal government can agree on an energy deal "over the course of the coming winter."

The federal negotiations have apparently bogged down over the distribution of revenue received from probable annual price increases of $1 a barrel for five years. Ottawa wants a bigger share of the revenue.

Meanwhile in Calgary today, The Albertan newspaper reported that an oil discovery that could ultimately prove as big as the massive West Pembina find has been made in the Clear Hills area about 480 kilometres northwest of Edmonton.



Khomeini won't meet Carter men

Times News Services

TEHRAN — The Ayatollah Khomeini announced today he would refuse to see President Carter's special emissary Ramsey Clark and forbade all Iranian government and revolutionary leaders from meeting with him.

Khomeini, in a special broadcast over the state radio, said talks on the fate of dozens of hostages held by Moslem students occupying the U.S. embassy could only be held if the United States handed over the shah and stopped its spying activities in Iran.

Iran's Islamic leader announced his refusal only hours after the White House disclosed it had dispatched Clark, a former U.S. Attorney General, as his personal emissary to negotiate the release of American hostages, the White House said today.

Clark — referred to in some dispatches as a friend of Khomeini's — had met previously with Khomeini when the ayatollah was in exile in France. He was accompanied on today's mission by William Miller, staff director of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence.

They were to try to settle a tense and embarrassing international problem for the United States that began Sunday when Iranian students stormed the U.S. embassy in Tehran and took dozens of Americans hostage, including 28 U.S. servicemen.

Western sources said today that Moslem militants had seized two more Americans from a hotel and delayed the departure of at least three others from the country.

However, the militants occupying the embassy and demanding the extradition of ousted Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi from the U.S. told supporters around the embassy to cease attacks on foreigners' homes. These attacks, they said in a communique, were "a plot to make us look savage."

In his special announcement broadcast tonight by the Iranian state radio, Khomeini said he felt it necessary to point out that the United States government, by allowing the shah to seek cancer treatment in a New York hospital, "has declared

Socred whip George Mussallem now says he was only kidding when he said caucus chairman Jack Kempf should be fired if he can't decide what to do with caucus researcher Ellen McKay, implicated in the dirty tricks scandal.

Mussallem said Tuesday that Kempf is a competent caucus chairman who is doing a good job in a difficult situation and he doesn't feel Kempf should be fired.

Kempf had said he would look to the party caucus for advice on how to handle MacKay, who has refused to accept a 30-day leave without pay as a reprimand for telling party officials that writing letters to newspapers over false signatures is easier than one might think.

MacKay has taken the position that her statements were authorized and expected and that a reprimand is not in order.

In further developments in the dirty tricks affair, contradictions arose on the issue of whether MacKay and fellow researcher Jack Kelly were reprimanded by their boss after their taped statements to a party seminar of constituency presidents in Vancouver a year ago.

Glen Mitchell, now executive assistant to Education Minister Pat McGeer, said he reprimanded both of them the following week for statements they made advocating the use of phoney letters to newspapers.

"I simply advised them there had been a lot of bad feeling at the meeting about what had been said and told them they shouldn't do it again," Mitchell said.

Both Kelly and MacKay deny such a meeting took place.

MacKay said one of the reasons she has refused to accept a reprimand for her part in the affair is that the statements she made at the seminar were authorized and expected.

Meanwhile, MacKay finished her second day back on the job with no work to do.

Unity petition gets charge from Hydro

British Columbians will have a chance to cast their vote for Canadian unity when they pay their next B.C. Hydro bill.

Copies of a petition for Canadian unity, urging Quebec citizens to remain within Confederation and welcoming them as equal partners in Canada's future growth, will be included with Hydro bills throughout B.C. during the next three months.

Hydro spokesman John Sexton said today the initiative to have the petition included in the bills came from committee members who approached Robert Bonner, chairman of the corporation.

"I think what is at stake here is something fundamentally important to every Canadian," Sexton said.

"The chairman is very interested in what they (the petitioners) are trying to do."

Sexton said Hydro had to print up special copies of the petition which would fit in the billing envelopes and this will cost the corporation something.

He said he does not have the cost figure at this time.

The petition has been signed by half a million people for presentation to Quebecers prior to their referendum on sovereignty association.

Keith Cowan of Victoria, one of the authors of the Canada-wide petition and co-chairman of the campaign, said costs of the petition are being met mostly by public and private donations.

Cowan said that since Hydro agreed to include the petition in billings to its 900,000 customers, the national committee for unity now is approaching hydro electric companies in other provinces urging them to participate in a similar plan.

Teddy makes it official

BOSTON (UPI) — Sen. Edward Kennedy, charging President Carter with "stark" failures in leadership, today announced he will seek the 1980 Democratic presidential nomination.

With his wife, his mother and the rest of the Kennedy clan looking on, the 47-year-old Kennedy declared his candidacy in historic Faneuil Hall one year before the 1980 election.

"I take the course compelled by events and by my commitment to public life," he said. "Today, I formally announce that I am a candidate for president of the United States."

"The failures are stark," Kennedy said in a ringing attack on Carter's administration as he followed in the footsteps of his brothers John and Robert in seeking the presidency.

He became the first announced Democratic candidate. Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California will announce Thursday in Washington and Carter will follow on Dec. 4.

Under Carter, Kennedy charged, the nation has been "sinking into crisis." He pointed specifically to economic and energy problems.

Trudeau vows to try again

OTTAWA (UPC) — Opposition leader Pierre Trudeau says he will probably try again to bring down Joe Clark's minority Conservative government which survived a vote of nonconfidence by only two votes Tuesday night.

"We won't harass the government on every issue for harassment's sake but if there is an important issue we will take action," the Liberal party leader told reporters after the splinter Social Credit party saved the government with its five votes.

"We will probably introduce another non-confidence motion around budget time," Trudeau said.

New Democratic Leader Ed Broadbent warned after the vote the government had "better start producing the goods" because so far they have not carried out election promises to curb inflation, unemployment and rising prices.

But government House Leader Walter Baker issued his own warning, noting the Conservatives have survived their third test in less than a month. "People are getting tired of these games and it is time to get on with governing the country," he said.

All 26 New Democratic Party members joined the Liberals' 112-member caucus in the third challenge to Clark's leadership since Parliament opened Oct. 9. The final vote was 140 to 138 with the only missing member Conservative MP Paul Yewchuk, who was in his Alberta riding opening a school.

The motion, put forward by Trudeau, condemned Clark's handling of energy policy and the economy.

Clark successfully wooed the Socred caucus earlier in the day by guaranteeing them he would provide adequate oil supplies to eastern Canada and to independent dealers in the region.

Blunt no to Levesque

The premiers of the four western provinces said today they reject the concept of Quebec independence with economic association with the rest of Canada.

"Sovereignty-association is neither in the economic interest of Western Canada nor in the broader interest of Canadians as a whole," premiers Bill Bennett, Peter Lougheed, Allan Blakeney and Sterling Lyon said in a joint statement released simultaneously at Victoria, Edmonton, Regina and Winnipeg.

"The Western premiers agreed that there is nothing contained in the white paper on sovereignty-association issued last week by the Quebec government that would in any way cause them to alter their views."

The Western premiers said at the annual premiers' conference in La Malbaie, Que., in August, they questioned Premier Rene Levesque on the meaning of sovereignty-association.

"The western premiers were left with the distinct

Fetus a person, judge rules

By ROGER STONEBANKS

A County Court judge ruled today in Victoria a fetus in the process of birth is a person according to the law of criminal negligence.

The ruling by Judge Peter Millward is believed the first of its kind, not only in Canada but elsewhere.

His judgment came in the case of a 52-year-old Sooke woman, Margaret Lillian Marsh, accused of criminal negligence causing death in a home childbirth.

The indictment said she caused the death of "a person," Nigel Ambery, on July 12, 1978.

The breech delivery occurred in a Shelbourne Street home. The parents had arranged for Marsh to attend.

The fetus showed no sign of life when born and cause of death was given as a cerebral hemorrhage.

Crown counsel Nicholas Lang argued in court last month that a fetus should be defined as a person at least from the onset of labor, but Judge Millward said it was not necessary for him to define precisely when an embryo becomes a person.

However, he said a fetus in the very process of being born is a person within the meaning of the Criminal Code's section on criminal negligence.

"The fact of death intervening between the time of birth and the moment injury was sustained does not change the quality of the wrongdoer's conduct," he said.

"A human fetus, at full term, immediately before the moment of birth is inherently indistinguishable from a newborn child, on a consideration of the entity itself."

The prosecution closed its case against Marsh Oct. 11 and Judge Millward reserved his decision on a motion by her lawyer, Peter Leask of Vancouver, that the Nigel Ambery named in the indictment was not a person according to law.

Leask also presented a motion that the prosecution did not include any evidence of a link between the cause of death and the alleged negligence of Marsh. This motion was also rejected.

The trial will continue with the defence case March 3 and 4, the earliest available county court dates.
